Civil Service Workers Get Warning to Avoid Politics

Commission Acts After Inquiry on Helping Lewis in Md.

Civil Service Warned.

In the midst of Maryland's hot primary fight, the United States Civil Service Commission yesterday warned classified Federal workers against engaging in political campaigns.

The warning, in the form of a poster, was described by the commission as "routine," but it came shortly after John G. Forsyth, business agent of the Machinists' Union, had asked how far Federal employes could go in aiding the campaign of Representative Lewis, New Deal candidate against Senator Tydings.

The warning poster listed those forbidden activities, among them use of campaign stickers on automobiles and "assuming political leadership or becoming prominently identified" with any political movement.

Other Developments.

There were these additional developments:

A Post reporter, after a survey in Baltimore, found Lewis strong in the Maryland metropolis and likely to carry four of the six legislative districts.

In Baltimore, Senator Tydings described as "lies" charges by Lewis that he had been "lobbying for big business rather than for the people of Maryland."

Last night, in a speech at Mayo, Anne Arundel County, Lewis said Tydings, as a result of his Sunday evening radio broadcast, had "made the issue in this campaign clear to every Maryland voter."

"He is against President Roosevelt and all he stands for—unequivocally, unalterably opposed," said Lewis.

Charges Loans Accepted.

Lewis wanted to know why, since Tydings had opposed so much of the New Deal, he had taken "personal advantage" of almost every one of its benefits. He said that Tydings borrowed $12,000 from the Home Owners Loan Corporation for his mansion at Havre de Grace, later paying it back.

He said Tydings got a free WPA road to his place at Oakington, a $15,000 WPA yacht basin near his home in Havre de Grace, and a Federal loan to purchase steers for his farm.

Lewis' charge that Tydings "lobbied for big business" was uttered in his radio reply to Tydings Sunday night. He said Tydings had

Grain Surplus Lowers Prices To Rival 1933

Administration Faced With Same Situation as Gave Birth to AAA.

Despite five years of planning to raise farm prices and income, the Administration was faced yesterday with an agricultural situation challenging that which gave birth to the AAA.

Crop surpluses, the thing AAA set out to conquer, shared blame with the business recession and slow world demand, for a deep drop in farm income and prices.

Inclusive Government benefits, farm cash income in the first six months of this year was estimated at only $3,341,000,000 by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, a cut of 12.7 per cent under the same period last year.

Bureau estimates of farm income for the full year were $7,500,000,000, or $1,100,000,000 less than in 1937.

Wheat and cotton, the one making a near-record 956,000,000-bushel crop and the other running up a 13,400,000-bale surplus, were selling below 1933 figures. The index price of all grain crops was 77, as against 78 in October, 1933.

Wheat prices were down to a farm average of about 53 cents a bushel compared with an average farm price of $1.18 a year ago.

Officials Reword Parking Ban So It Is 'Fool-Proof'

District officials yesterday brought forth a "fool-proof" regulation on parking near intersections, which is to be approved today.

By inserting the words "existing line of building" in place of "building line" in the regulation, Washington motorists can have no complaints, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said.

The present regulation prohibits parking "between the intersection of curb lines and a point 20 feet back of the building line, but in no case to exceed 50 feet from intersection of curb lines except as otherwise expressly provided in these regulations."

Enforcement will not begin until 10 days after publishing of the amended regulation, and until, Hazen pointed out, the top of the curb lining the restricted area has been painted solid yellow, replacing the present three yellow stripes.

Green Reveals Defection of 2 Locals From Lewis' Own Unit.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, Aug. 20.—President William Green of the A. F. of L. disclosed tonight the federation was intensifying its three-year-old fight with the C. I. O. by pressing organization drives into coal mining and the maritime industry.

Green said the federation's efforts to build up strength in coal mining, now dominated by John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers, resulted in the switch of two U. M. W. locals to the A. F. of L. last week.

The executive council postponed discussion of grievances against the National Labor Relations Board, and framing of recommendations for amendments to the Wagner labor relations act which would either restrict or more clearly define the board's powers.

First step in the federation's maritime organization campaign calls for merger of the Sailors Union of the Pacific and A. F. of L. seamen's unions at Atlantic, Gulf and Great Lake ports.

The sailors' union, which has been independent, recently voted to affiliate with the A. F. of L.

The A. F. of L. leader said he had reports a "considerable bloc" in the C. I. O.'s National Maritime Union was ready to break away from the Lewis organization.

'Purge' Answers Reds' Dream, Writer Says at Dies Inquiry

President Roosevelt's purge of the Democratic Party is in exact accord with the aims of the Communists, who envision a new liberal party created out of the present split, J. B. Matthews, writer-teacher, charged yesterday before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Matthews concluded days of sensational disclosures, in which he named scores of leading citizens as "fronts" for the Communist Party, by charging the Red influence had now pervaded Hollywood, the Nation's churches, the United States Army and the political parties.

Dewey Rows With Pecora, Gets Rebuke

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 22.—District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, prosecuting James J. Hines, veteran Tammany leader, in Supreme Court today, on charges of conspiring to protect Dutch Schultz's policy racket, accused Justice Pecora, who is hearing the case, of favoring counsel for the defense. Justice Pecora resentfully rebuked the district attorney and declared he would continue to rule as he deemed fit to keep improper evidence from the jury.

Their colloquy, conducted during argument by opposing counsel at the bench, was unheard either by the jury, which was out of the room, or by courtroom listeners including reporters.

It became known only because newspapers of the city had combined to have transcripts of the court record wired into their offices. After a vain attempt to prevent the publication of the record, Justice Pecora ordered that conversation between counsel and the court be deleted from the transcript.

Was High Point of Hearing.

In consequence, records of all later conversations at the bench today were withheld from newspapers; these, and presumably similiar records during the remainder of the trial are to be made public only after permission by the court.

The flare-up between the district attorney and Justice Pecora was the high point of today's hearing. The name of the defendant was brought into testimony only once, when Leo Altman, giant West Indian, testified Leo Rosenthal, lieutenant of Hines now held as a witness in $20,000 bail, and "Red" Williams, the Hines district captain who recanted testimony against the leader last week, were frequenters of the Schultz gang's hang-out in 1933.

Altman's job with the gang, he testified, included picking up $1,000 or more every Monday from "Big Harry" Schoenhaus, and taking it down to the court of special sessions for use in paying the fines of runners or controllers of the syndicate who might be convicted.

Alexander Pompez, Harlem policy banker, told of contributing $600 weekly in combination with another $600 by "Big Joe" Ison for the service of eliminating "bad numbers" which might pop out of the totalizators at various race tracks, thereby forcing them to pay out heavily to players who had picked those digits.

Induced Her to Join.

The day also brought forward another Harlem policy banker, Marcial Florez, who told how the Schultz gang had taken over his business.

A former small independent policy banker, one Gussie Silverman, also told how two "gorillas" for the Schultz mob, "Abe" Landau, or "The Killer," and "Lulu" Rosenkrantz induced her to join the combination. She told also how when she joined, police visits which used to average once or twice a day dwindled to once or twice a month.

Max Steuer, noted lawyer for Tammany Hall, appeared this morning in the courthouse, and it was learned he had been subpenaed as a defense witness by former District Attorney William C. Dodge, one of the judicial officers who, according to the prosecution, was under the influence of Hines in the alleged

Jail Hunger Strikers Die By 'Violence'

Murder Hinted in Climax of Self-Enforced Protest Fast.

By the United Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 22.—Four convicts whose battered bodies were found in isolation cells of Philadelphia County Prison met death "by violence" in a riotous 5-day hunger strike, a coroner's physician reported late today.

Coroner Charles M. Hersch, describing the circumstances surrounding the deaths as "very suspicious," supplemented Dr. Martin Crane's report with the announcement that the bodies were "blue" and that of one of the victims was "black."

All "Long-Termers."

The men, Joseph Walters, Pittsburgh and Harry Osborne, Edward Hayes and James McQuade, all of Philadelphia and serving long terms for burglary and shooting, were found in two cells in the "isolation" ward where hunger strikers were placed. Two other convicts, Joseph Forte, 24, and Morris Spatz, 27, one in each of the cells where the dead men were found, were unharmed.

Superintendent William B. Mills refused to comment on the deaths other than to charge that the four men were "agitators" using the hunger strike as an "excuse to make trouble." In his first announcement regarding the deaths, Mills described it as "suicide."

Hersch said the bodies were "congealed" and "blue from the chest up." Hayes, he said, was "black."

Official Suggests "Fight."

Persons who saw the bodies after their transfer to the county morgue said they bore "cuts" and appeared "bruised."

Mills issued a statement later denying the men were "handled with physical violence by any of my guards or men."

Replying to published descriptions of the bodies as having the appearance of men scalded by live steam or immersed in boiling water, Mills said "we did not use any rubber hoses, live steam or tear gas to calm the men."

He said that "possibly" the men had been killed in fighting "between themselves"

Strike Started Wednesday.

The men were reported to have refused to touch food since the strike began Wednesday night in protest against the monotony of fried eggplant, hamburger and macaroni.

Most of the 650 men who struck abandoned the strike after the first two days of water as a diet. The remainder succumbed gradually to the lure of bread and water placed before their cells and the aroma of roast beef and corn on the cob from the prison dining hall. All but the six in special confinement, where the deaths occurred, had announced their willingness to end the strike.

Earle Promises Probe.

Last night the prison was a bedlam. Nearly all of the 1,481 prisoners rattled tin cups on their cell doors. The noise was audible beyond the high prison walls.

Ancon, Canal Zone, Aug. 22 (U.P.).—Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania tonight promised a "complete investigation" into the deaths of four hunger-striking convicts in the Philadelphia County prison.

Mexican Envoy Given U.S. Reply On Land Seizure

The State Department last night handed to the Mexican Ambassador the awaited United States reply to Mexico's rejection of arbitration as a means of settling a dispute running back as long as 20 years over nonpayment for properties of American citizens expropriated by the Mexican government.

In order to give the ambassador time to transmit this latest U. S. note to his government, simultaneous publication here and in Mexico City Friday was arranged.

The United States had pointed out in a note to Mexico that despite promises of settlement, many U. S. citizens had awaited periods ranging up to two decades for payment on expropriated property and suggested arbitration by an international group.

Middleburg 'Deb' Arrested Here on Speeding Charge

Miss Bettina Belmont, 19, prominent debutante horse woman of Middleburg, Va., was arrested last night for speeding along N street northwest. Motorcycle Policeman A. L. Dodge, who caught up with the socialite at 3400 block of N street, charged she was driving her auto at 50 miles per hour.

Miss Belmont was released on $100 collateral. Her check was cashed by the Mayflower Hotel. This was her second speeding offense, according to police.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Arthur White, of Clinton Farms, Middleburg, and the late Raymond Belmont. She received part of her education at Georgetown Visitation Convent here.

2 Earth Tremors Hit South Jersey And Philadelphia

Trenton, N. J. (Tuesday), Aug. 23 (U.P.).—Two slight surface earthquakes within an hour and a half were felt in the southern half of New Jersey and around Philadelphia late last night and early today.

Houses were shaken and many persons were awakened by the vibrations. A few persons reported being shaken from their beds.

The first shock was felt at 11.34 last night in an area approximately 50 to 85 miles, from the East Atlantic shore of New Jersey to Philadelphia—and 85 miles long from Trenton to the southern part of the State. Its duration was from five to 25 seconds. The second shock was more severe.

Director James Stokely, of Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, said the earthquake was "slight" and that the apparent center was in Bucks County, Pa., adjoining Philadelphia.

U. S. Junior C. of C. President Lends Support to Safety Drive

Whole-hearted indorsement to the Washington Post-Junior Board of Commerce accident prevention program was voiced last night by Philip C. Ebeling, national president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, as 500 local members of the organization pledged support to stem the tide of accident injuries and deaths on the District's streets.

Speaking over the local outlet of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Ebeling said other units of the junior board throughout the nation would institute similar campaigns.

"The Washington Post - Junior Board campaign, from what I have already seen, will not be merely a flash in the pan," he said.

"It is through similar measures that the United States Junior Cham-

Crisis in France.

By the United Press.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A threatened nation-wide general strike, exceeding labor walkouts which paralyzed French industry and commerce two years ago, confronted Premier Daladier tonight after two of his key cabinet ministers resigned.

Minister of Public Works Louis Frossard and Minister of Labor Paul Ramadier quit the government in opposition to the premier's demand for drastic relaxation of the 40-hour week in industry and his action in calling out Senegalese troops to unload ships at Marseilles where 7,000 stevedores are on strike.

Both Frossard and Ramadier are Union Socialists, more leftist than Daladier's own Radical Socialists, but not so far left as the Socialists and Communists of the weakening Popular Front.

New Ministers Named.

Socialists and Communists, threatening serious labor trouble, tonight accused Daladier of capitulating to employers on the issue of the 40-hour week—keystone of the Popular Front's labor reform program—although his government nominally is of the Popular Front.

Possibility of a government crisis was seen when the Union Socialist party announced late tonight that it will meet in Paris Wednesday to consider the political situation.

The danger of strikes was increased when miners in the Anzin basin decided to prepare for strike action.

The self-described "national defense premier," faced with acute internal troubles at a time when fresh complications have arisen in the Spanish and Italo-French situations, immediately selected two other Union Socialists to replace Ramadier and Frossard.

Deputy Anatole de Monzie became minister of public works, and Deputy Charles Pomaret was named minister of labor to cope with the threatening crisis.

Cabinet Fall Unlikely Now.

The executive committee of the General Labor Confederation, representing 5,000,000 organized French workers, tonight issued a manifesto describing "the danger to the country and infraction of the social laws" and calling on the workers to remain vigilant "for any action that may be decided."

The manifesto proclaimed the organization's determination to "protect the 40-hour week" and denounced the use of troops at Marseilles.

Daladier's speed in patching up his cabinet and the fact that Parliament is on summer vacation, after giving the premier sweeping decree powers, seemed to reduce possibility of any immediate downfall of the government which has been in power since last April 10.

Daladier's government may be the last to be termed Popular Front

Senate Offered 3 Ways to Tax Exempt Bonds

Special Committee Given Suggestions on Reaching New Revenue.

By Robert C. Albright.

Three indirect methods of tapping the vast reservoir of tax-exempt securities will be laid before a special Senate committee seeking constitutional means of ending reciprocal exemptions on State and Federal bond issues and official salaries, it was learned last night.

Preliminary to the Senate studies, Chairman Brown, Democrat, of Michigan, of the special Senate committee, will return here today for opening talks with Treasury and congressional tax experts.

Advance data already has been placed in his hands by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue. All tax studies have been concentrated on the whole field of "tax-exempts" as next session's most lucrative field for needed new revenue.

Total Income Counted.

To meet constitutional objections, raised by some critics, to a direct legislative levy on incomes derived from Federal, State and local treasuries the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue has proposed these alternative plans:

Computation of the rate of tax upon the total net income of the taxpayer, including that from tax-exempt securities, and applying this rate only to his taxable income.

Imposition of an excise or privilege tax on individuals and corporations, on the right of doing business or engaging in any profession, trade or calling. The excise tax would be measured by the net income of the individual or corporation from all sources, including income from tax-exempt securities.

The "state compact" method, under which Congress might grant to the States the power to tax the income from Federal securities if the States would grant a similar privilege to the Federal Government.

Congress Divided.

The President himself favors more direct methods. He told Congress last April 25 the Sixteenth amendment plainly authorizes taxation of income derived from State and municipal as well as Federal bonds, and also income derived from State and municipal as well as Federal offices.

Congressional tax authorities immediately divided into three schools of thought. One group held the Sixteenth Amendment was conditioned by rulings of the Supreme Court that Congress has no power to tax the income of State securities. It proposed the slower and more certain method of a constitutional amendment. Another group argued Congress indirectly could accomplish the same end by roundabout legislation. Strict New Dealers held with the President that Congress should legislate directly and put it up to the courts.

To find a way out of the dilemma, the Senate put the problem up to the special committee headed by Senator Brown. So that all phases might be weighed, the special group was composed jointly of three members each from the Finance Committee, which passes on all direct tax questions, and the Senate Judiciary Committee, which handles constitutional amendments.

Magill, Hanes Consulted.

Brown has set no date for opening committee studies but has been in touch with Treasury and Congressional tax experts. On this visit to Washington he is expected to confer with Undersecreary of the Treasury Roswell Magill, John W. Hanes, who will succeed Magill as Treasury tax spokesman, C. F. Stan, tax expert of the joint committee, and Assistant Attorney General James W. Morris.

Serving with Brown on the special tax committee are Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, and Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, representing the Finance Committee, and Senators Logan, of Kentucky, and McGill, of Kansas (Democrats), and Austin (Republican), of Vermont, representing the Judiciary Committee.

Both Chairman Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, and Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, have said that unless business substantially improves Congress will be forced to launch a new search for revenue. With the President committed to eliminating at one stroke the whole pool of "tax exempts," both the Treasury and the joint committee have rounded out the groundwork studies that may serve as a springboard for early committee action.

U. S. and Sweden To Discuss Taxes

The State Department announced yesterday negotiations between the United States and Sweden would be started Sept. 12 with a view to concluding a convention for avoiding double taxation, and establishing rules of reciprocal administrative assistance. The discussions will be conducted in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Washington.

The Swedish delegation will be headed by W. Bostrom, the Swedish minister. The United States will be represented by Eldon P. King, special deputy commissioner of internal revenue; Frederick Livesey, assistant adviser on international economic affairs, and Harry R. Turkel, treaty division, Department of State.

REA Allots Farms $13,175,600 in Day

By the Associated Press.

The Rural Electrification Administration alloted $13,175,600 yesterday for construction of country power lines, wiring of farm houses and installation of plumbing in 26 States.

The Administration said the money would be used to construct 12,118 miles of lines which would make electric service available to more than 40,000 farm families.

The allotments brought total REA financing to more than $122,000,000, of which $31,500,000 has been drawn from the $140,000,000 set aside by Congress for REA loans in the fiscal year 1938-39.

TVA Inquiry Scans Utilities' Publicity Next

Sessions at Chattanooga Open Hearing Today on Propaganda.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 22.—Congress' Tennessee Valley Authority investigators turned today toward private utility "propaganda" methods after hearing an ousted TVA chairman described as "unreliable, reckless and erratic."

Committeemen will go to Chattanooga tomorrow to hear testimony dealing with utilities' reputed effort to combat sentiment for public power projects, thus definitely shifting the focus of the inquisatorial spotlight for the first time since the inquiry began six weeks ago.

Aimed at Morgan.

Director David E. Lilienthal gave the sharp testimony aimed at Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, former TVA chairman whose dismissal and accusations precipitated the investigation.

The decision to move the hearings to Chattanooga for two or three days was made in an executive session delayed two hours by Republican minority members who asserted they had received no formal notice of the meeting.

Committee Counsel Francis Biddle proposed the trip and said he was "prepared to put on evidence with respect to the activities of public utilities" there.

"The evidence," he said in a memorandum to committeemen, "will deal solely with propaganda and no evidence will be given, of course, with respect to the 'yardstick,' power or similar questions."

Irked by Distinction.

Lilienthal declared Dr. Morgan had accused him and Harcourt A. Morgan, now TVA chairman, of "personal corruption," and later denied he intended to accuse them of any personal dishonesty.

"My understanding is that Dr. Morgan now holds there is a difference between dishonesty in public office and the ordinary garden variety," Lilienthal asserted. "I see no distinction."

Representative Jenkins (Republican), Ohio, said he could find nothing to show Dr. Morgan had charged personal dishonesty, but Lilienthal replied the charges had been so interpreted by press and public.

Lewis Held Sure Of Prince Georges, 10 Other Counties

Victory for David J. Lewis in the Senate primary race against Senator Millard Tydings in Prince Georges, Anne Arundel, Calvert and eight other Maryland counties was forecast last night at an organization meeting of the Mount Rainier Lewis-for-Senator Club.

Justices of the Peace Robert E. Joyce and John E. Bell told more than 100 Lewis sympathizers in the home of Cornelius Ryan that Lewis would carry Prince Georges County.

George Geddens, a World War veteran supporter of Lewis, reported a victory swing toward Lewis on the basis of a survey of eight other counties.

John Riggles, of Seabrook, said Lewis would win in Anne Arundel and Calvert counties.

Ryan was chosen president of the club. Elected as vice chairmen were John G. Forsythe, Louis Lewis and Bernard Miles.

Dewey Accuses Judge Pecora Of Favoring Hines Defense

Hines

Called Counsel to Bench.

The clash between Justice Pecora and Mr. Dewey arose when the prosecution attempted to introduce evidence concerning one Dan Smith, former New York patrolman, discharged from the force, who is alleged to have been a bodyguard for various money carriers in the policy business. Defense Attorney Lloyd Paul Stryker leaped to his feet when the name came up and, after some bickering, Justice Pecora called opposing counsel to the bench.

Dewey said he could not understand how at this point in the trial the defense kept asking the prosecution to state the purpose of every question asked, or kept demanding a conference at the bench. The members of his staff, he said, are all members of the bar and familiar with the criminal law.

Increasingly insistent that he was being needlessly impeded, he drew from Justice Pecora the remark that conferences at the bench would continue to be called as the court deemed fit.

"Your honor has several times rebuked me," Dewey broke out at last, "for pressing my point in evidence, whereas no such rebuke has ever been issued to counsel for the defense, although overruled.

"They have no witnesses on direct examination as yet," Justice Pecora demurred, "and I have not rebuked the district attorney.

"Resents" Dewey Remark.

"I have called the district attorney's attention, perhaps at times forcibly, to certain conduct that I thought was improper, and should not have been indulged in in the presence of the jury." He cited Dewey's suggestion to "Gig Joe" Ison, last Thursday, that he step from the witness stand and plead guilty to the indictment against him as a co-conspirator as wholly improper.

Dewey, after saying that of course he must accept the judgment of the court in the matter, said he would "ask the court to indulge in the assumption of good faith on behalf of a duly elected public officer that he does on behalf of counsel for the defense."

"I am not saying anything was done in bad faith," Justice Pecora objected, "but there is error——"

Dewey interrupted. "But the rebuke of the district attorney," he said, "it seemed, was in a manner as if he were an interloper in the courtroom. . . ."

"You have absolutely no right to say that at all," Justice Pecora replied. "I resent your saying it."

Sam Foremen, of the Bronx, testified he was first a collector, and then a worker in the policy bank for one of two brothers named Maloney who were members of the "combination." The brother whom he knew was named "Eddie," he testified. He worked in "Eddie's" bank, he said from 1932 to late in 1934, and by direction of "Big Harry" Schoenhaus did work on an adding machine, first in New York, later in Mount Vernon, then back to New York, and at last J. Richard (Dixie) Davis-maintained penthouse.

Penthouse Raided.

There was a raid there, he said, on February 19, 1934. He was one of fourteen employes who were taken to headquarters, he said. Although he did not ask for a lawyer, one was provided. He named counsel as "Dixie" Davis, soon to be star witness for the prosecution.

Once, he testified, he tried to quit. He told Eddie Malone he was going to quit. Eddie said nothing, but the next day "Abe" Landau phoned him.

"He told me I couldn't quit, due to the fact I knew where the bank was," he testified. "I went back to work that afternoon."

Leo Altman testified he was paid $50 a week when taking care of persons arrested in the independent policy banking operations of "Big Joe" Ison, but when he took charge of helping prisoners for the "combination," his wages were raised to $100 weekly.

"If they were fined," he said, "I paid the fine, and I also introduced them to their lawyer." He got his first instructions for the "combination," he said, from "Dixie" Davis. He said that among the persons he saw frequently with Davis was Leo Rosenthal, Hines' aid.

Pompez told how Dan Smith, the discharged policeman, accompanied him to Jamaica, Queens, when he was carrying $10,000 there to pay off, about Thanksgiving, 1933. He told also of the distribution of cards to all runners or collectors, when the centralized bail bond system was set up.

"We'll Break Their Skulls."

He named Koch as the bondsman; Altman as an aid; said Davis gave Altman instructions, and testified when a group of bankers protested at the cutting of payments to their controllers, "Bo" Weinberg assured them if the controllers objected, "we'll break their skulls."

He said, when "Abe" Landau went to address them, one of his men "Abe" Hiffler, told Landau, "I don't care for all your machine guns; I'm going to quit business now," and another named "Tino" said the same thing. "Lulu" Rosenkrantz added his threats to those of Landau, he testified, but the controllers simply went on strike. They failed to turn in "the business," and the "take" dropped from $8,000 a day to lows such as $185. When the business was at this stage, he said, it was suggested to him that he himself was holding out proceeds from the mob.

"I was told I'd be bumped off," he said, "if I was double-crossing."

Texas, Wyoming Win Navy Laurels

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Midshipmen aboard the U. S. S. Texas and enlisted men of the U. S. S. Wyoming won the lion's share of honors today in a series of ship and water contests staged at the naval base by groups from the Texas, Wyoming, and New York, comprising the training squadron.

Enlisted men of the New York kept their ship from being shut out of the awards by taking the motorboat competition, a contest in which smartness and efficiency in seamanship are the deciding factors.

21 Will Apply Wage and Hour Act to Textiles

Andrews to Start 'Thinking Tobacco' Today or Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

The Nation's textile industry, with its hundreds of thousands of men and women employes, became the testing ground yesterday for the new wages-hours act.

Twenty-one men—representatives of manufacturers, labor and the public—will draft the initial regulations of working hours and wages under direction of Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator.

They will determine minimum wages to be paid in the textile mills, maximum hours employes may work over the looms.

The South—termed by President Roosevelt as the Nation's No. 1 economic problem—also will provide the second industry for regulation under the wage-hours act.

Andrews said he hoped "to begin thinking tobacco as well as smoking it today or tomorrow."

Preparations for regulation of the tobacco industry probably will be followed by consideration of the cotton garment industry, another business with widely scattered plants in Southern States.

Andrews, announcing decision to put 21 members on the textile committee, emphasized that membership did not necessarily mean committees of similar size would be appointed for other industries.

He pointed to the complicated ramifications of textile prooduction, and said other industries might, because of more simple industrial set-ups, require many less committee members.

Including cotton, rayon and silk production in the textile industry set-up, he said representatives of the three types of cloth production had agreed a single committee could determine efficiently wages and hours for the industry.

The wage-hour administrator said several days—or possibly a week or more—would elapse before the committee members were named.

Maverick Barred From Texas Ballot As an Independent

Austin, Tex., Aug. 22 (AP).—An attempt by friends of Representative Maverick, ardent New Dealer, to run him for re-election as an independent suffered a substantial setback today.

Secretary of State Edward Clark said he would not permit Maverick's name to be printed on the ballot because a person participating in a Democratic primary was under obligation to support the nominees of that primary. Unless the courts should overturn Clark's decision, Maverick's only recourse apparently would be to conduct a write-in campaign.

Maverick lost by less than 1,000 votes in the Democratic primary to Paul J. Kilday, who promised he would not be a "yes man" for President Roosevelt.

Maverick, in Washington, declined comment.

3 Killed, 1 Injured As W. Va. Car Hits Tree and Burns

Special Dispatch to The Post

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 22.—Trapped in their blazing automobile at Shirley, W. Va., three local men were burned to death and a fourth seriously injured when their car struck a tree late today near here.

All were between 20 and 24 years of age. The dead were Brady Smith, driver of the car, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Smith; Donald Furbee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Furbee, and Ralph Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Smith, who died en route to a hospital.

Robert Boyce, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Boyce, who has a fractured skull, may recover.

A coroner's jury found the driver, Brady, turned to watch a baseball game and the car struck a tree at the side of the road and the car ignited.

By Edward T. Folliard

A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Aug. 22.—The driver of Yellow Cab 260 got the green light, swung into Hanover street, and resumed his analysis of Maryland's political situation.

"We like President Roosevelt over here," he said, "but we don't like the idea of him coming in here trying to beat Tydings. Everybody knows what's been going on in Europe, and it looks like Roosevelt is trying to get so he can do anything he wants."

Cab drivers usually are excellent pulse feelers, keen students of the local scene. But this one apparently was out of tune with his Baltimore. He either had been reading editorials or traveling around the wrong parts of town.

Labor for Lewis.

Representative David J. Lewis, from all indications, is going to carry this Maryland metropolis over Senator Millard E. Tydings. That is to say, it looks as if he is going to carry most of it. Baltimore has six legislative districts. The Lewis people claim that they have four of these nailed down, and the Tydings people do not dispute them very heartily, although they do say that they might rescue one of the four.

In those sections where live the longshoremen, the mill workers and others who sweat a lot, they can hardly wait to help President Roosevelt and "Little Davey" Lewis purge Tydings from public life. "States' rights? Invasion? Baloney! Tydings has lined up with the bankers and the Tory Republicans. Roosevelt and Lewis are for the working man."

There are sections in Baltimore where every shop window carries a Lewis placard, where every man and every woman wears a Lewis button. It is so along the waterfront in the First and Sixth legislative districts, where the C. I. O. is strong.

Tydings Chance Slim.

Tydings would seem to have no chance in these two districts. Nevertheless, his campaign workers go into them with their sound trucks, and so far only one of them has been punched in the nose. They remind the voters—when they can get anybody to listen—that Tydings, too, worked his way up in life. They tell them that he fought to preserve labor's right to strike, that he was a pioneer advocate of public works, that he voted for the Home Owners Loan Corporation. But it doesn't do much good.

Lewis, their 5-foot, 69-year-old hero, who started life as a mine boy, has told them that Tydings is anti-Roosevelt, an Old Dealer, a Tory Republican, and that is enough.

Besides the First and Sixth Districts, the Lewis camp claims the Third and Fourth Districts. They think they might also carry the Second.

Wealthy for Senator.

Tydings would appear to be strongest in the Fifth District, which includes wealthy Roland Park, Mount Washington, St. Mary's Seminary and Pimlico. But the district also embraces the Twentieth Ward, wherein live a number of factory and mill workers.

The Tydings strategists claim the Second District, which includes part of downtown Baltimore, Park avenue with its "old families," and a heavy Irish-American population in the Tenth Ward. They say that the Third is "doubtful."

But even if Lewis carries four districts in Baltimore, he still has to back them up with plenty of victories out in the counties.

Counties Lewis Problem.

In the post-primary Democratic convention, in which the Senate nominee actually will be chosen, there will be 149 votes. To win, Lewis or Tydings will have to get 75, a majority.

Baltimore has 42 votes in the convention, seven for each legislative district. Thus, if Lewis won four of them he would have 28 convention votes. He would have to pick up 47 more out in the counties.

In some sections of Maryland one is told that President Roosevelt's blacklisting of Tydings as a "betrayer" of the New Deal has aroused keen resentment, and has made votes for Tydings. One is told further that if Roosevelt comes into the State and makes a pro-Lewis speech on Labor Day, it will help Tydings even more.

Baltimore Disagrees.

However, the men who are trying to win over Baltimore for Tydings don't agree with this view at all. Roosevelt, they remind you, is a vote-getter.

All of which indicates the dilemma Tydings was up against when he drafted the speech he made over the air Sunday night. His headquarters said that the reaction, generally speaking, was good.

There were many, however, who thought that Tydings should have gone further and tangled with Roosevelt more vigorously. They thought that he should have taken the offensive a bit more.

Those trying to line up the voters, however, thought he was too vigorous. They have a dread that he may have said something that will give Roosevelt an excuse for striking back.

Rep. Wadsworth To Keynote G.O.P. 'Cornfield' Parley

Representative Wadsworth, of New York, will be chief speaker at a Republican "cornfield conference" at Capehart Farms, Ind., next Saturday, the Republican National Committee said yesterday.

Martin, assistant chairman of the National committee in charge of Women's activities, and Senator Townsend, of Delaware, chairman of the Republican Senatorial campaign committee.

The annual Illinois State Republican convention will be held at Peoria, Ill., August 31.

McNutt Statement On Philippines Is Unsupported Here

By the Associated Press.

War and State Department officials said yesterday they had made no official commitments regarding High Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's proposal for a "realistic re-examination" of the Philippine independence problem.

Declining to indicate whether McNutt's proposal for re-examining the Philippine independence question would be carried out, they said the report of the joint preparatory committee on Philippine affairs would be off the press "very soon."

The report, which well-informed persons said would take no cognizance of McNutt's "realistic re-examination" proposal, will be released for publication simultaneously in Manila and Washington after consultation between Presidents Roosevelt and Quezon.

Hopkins Hits WPA 'Fund' to Beat O'Connor

Assails Workers Alliance Plea for Money From Relief Employes.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 22.—WPA Administrator Hopkins today expressed disapproval of any effort by the Workers Alliance in New York City to raise a campaign fund among WPA workers for use against Representative O'Connor, whose re-election is opposed by President Roosevelt.

Hopkins, at the summer White House, said he had read that the Workers Alliance, an organization of WPA workers, was attempting to raise a $50,000 campaign fund against O'Connor in the New York Representative's race for renomination.

Although saying the plan was legal, Hopkins added vigorous words of criticism. "I just don't like the idea of money being raised from WPA workers for political purposes," he said. "I don't care who it is being raised for or against."

Hopkins said he knew of nothing he could do about the Workers Alliance fund-raising proposal except to express his disapproval. He added:

"Naturally most of these people (WPA workers) are supporting the program and the political party with which they are in sympathy.

"But as to the possibility of bringing pressure on them—I don't like it and I never have. It's bad.

"Obviously, I am in political sympathy with the President. He would not want some one on the other side of the fence to administer this program.

"When I make appointments in the field I appoint people who are competent, of course, but I do not appoint those who do not believe in the program or those who would submarine the program."

Hopkins drew a distinction between solicitation of funds from those on relief rolls and members of the WPA supervisory staff.

He said that officials—Federal, State and local—commonly are asked to contribute to campaign chests.

Hopkins said he had reported to the President the present WPA load of approximately 3,000,000 was about the peak of the program.

Besides Hopkins, the President's visitors today were Charles West, former Undersecretary of the Interior, and Sir Henry Hohler, British Minister to Colombia.

West told reporters he would "campaign vigorously" for Robert Bulkley and Charles Sawyer in their respective Democratic campaigns for the Ohio Senate seat and the governorship.

In Washington, Chairman Sheppard (Democrate), Texas, said he would lay before the Senate campaign expenditures committee published reports that the Workers Alliance had appealed to WPA workers for political contributions.

Examiner Asks Ford Be Told to Rehire Strikers

Labor Act Violated at Calif. Plant, Board's Agent Says in Report.

By the United Press.

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner recommended to the board last night that it order the Ford Motor Company to reinstate 400 strikers at its Long Beach, Calif., assembly plant and grant sole bargaining rights to the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers of America.

The examiner, R. N. Denham, ruled the company had violated the Wagner act by refusing on three different occasions to bargain with the U. A. W., which, he said, represented a majority of the company's employes.

He recommended that the company be required to withdraw all recognition from the unaffiliated Independent Auto Workers as a collective bargaining agency of its workers and "completely disestablish" the organization "as such representative, either in its present form or in any other form identified with or traceable to its present organization, management or administration."

Fifth 'Ford Guilty' Ruling.

Denham's report marked the fifth Ford case in which either the board itself or one of its examiners had found the company guilty of violating the labor relations statute. Several other Ford cases are pending.

Denham said the company had dominated and interfered with the Independent Union in its Long Beach plant and had discouraged membership in the U. A. W.

The C. I. O. Union called a strike April 15 after the company had refused to meet with its bargaining committee to discuss seniority provisions and proposed layoffs, Denham said.

The trial examiner said a comparison of company pay rolls against union membership cards disclosed the C. I. O. union had a clear majority of the company's workers.

The examiners' report was made public by the board a few hours after it had taken under advisement the sole issue in the bloody "Little Steel" strike of 1937—whether the Wagner act requires an employer to sign a union contract if agreement is reached in collective bargaining.

Attorneys for the Inland Steel Co., the C. I. O.'s Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and the unaffiliated Steel Workers Independent Union presented conflicting views on the question in three and one-half hours of oral argument before Chairman J. Warren Madden and Member Donald Wakefield Smith.

Scientists Told Of New Auto Sans Gears and Clutch

Cambridge, England, Aug. 22 (AP).—Plans for a revolutionary automobile without gears or clutch were presented today to the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

Prof. Frederick C. Lea, formerly of Sheffield University, who presented the paper, said the new method of power transmission also could be applied to airplanes, ships and railroad trains.

It was understood an English company was being formed to promote the invention, credited by Prof. Lea to Commander Piero Salerni, an Italian engineer living in England.

Claims for the gearless car—in which a centrifugal pump replaces the gear box and clutch—are that it would use less gasoline, increase the mileage and quicken acceleration.

Prof. Lea said he based his conclusions on tests of more than 60,000 miles with such an automobile.

Neptune Defied By Fo'csle Club In Regatta Plan

Undersea King's Ultimatum Ignored, Organization Drafts Program.

King Neptune yesterday served notice on the President's Cup regatta committee "no regatta can be pulled off in these waters without official sanction and payment of the marine hocus tax."

General Chairman Councilor just said "or else."

Elaborate plans for a "nautical drama," to be staged at the Watergate Thursday night, September 15, were revealed by L. P. Steuart, chairman of the civic committee.

A cast of 455 persons, directed by Col. H. S. Kimberly, chairman of the pageant committee, will present a drama based on the everlasting fight between King Neptune and his undersea forces and the terrestrials, headed by Councilor.

Gordon Hittenmark, N. B. C. announcer, told the members present yesterday he heard Lee Everett, rival announcer, had purchased "an admiral's outfit" for the proposed speed-boat race between the two radiomen.

Nine bands to march in the parade Friday night, September 16, have already been enlisted, Steuart said.

Sailing races will be held on Saturday and Sunday, September 17 and 18.

U. S. Cleric Weds Chinese Pair In Greek Lawyer's Home Here

Miss Pearl Moy and Chen Hong yesterday stood in the garden of a Washington lawyer, of Greek descent, and were married by an Episcopalian clergyman born in China while 100 Chinese and American friends looked on.

Yesterday's ceremony starts a week of festivities for the young couple who will follow Chinese custom in proceeding from party to party given by their friends and relatives in Washington and New York.

Chen Hong is president of the Lotus Restaurant Co. of Washington, while his wife is the daughter of K. K. Moy, of New York, for 20 years associated with the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. The former Miss Moy returned to this country only two months ago after attending a finishing school in Hongkong.

Their hostess yesterday was Mrs. G. W. Sakis, organizer of the first Americanization classes at Webster School and attorney for a number of the Capital's Chinese, who opened her home at 7206 Alaska avenue northwest for the wedding.

The service was performed by Dr. Eliot Thomson, son of a former Episcopalian Bishop in China.

Policeman Talks Man Out of Leap

Fast talking by a policeman yesterday prevented a 70-year-old man from jumping off Key Bridge because he had been "duped" of $500.

Later identified as Palmero Gualiania, 70, of 16 Q street northwest, the man stood tottering on the edge of the bridge long enough for Policeman Joseph A. Meyer of the Seventh Precinct, to grab him before he made the fatal leap. Meyer later told reporters he "just kept talking and walking" toward the man until he was able to grab him. Gualiania was said to have been swindled out of $500 in a "crooked deal."

Less than 10 hours earlier Policeman Meyer arrested a man who instructed a cab driver to take him to Key Bridge so he "could jump off."

Two Die, 49 Hurt in N. Y. Subway Crash; Panic and Fire in Dark Follow Collision

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 22.—Two men were killed and 49 persons were injured today when a subway train smashed into the rear of another on the upper east side of Manhattan.

An instant after the impact, which smashed the coach windows and extinguished all lights, panic broke loose 25 feet underground.

Hundreds of men, women and children screamed and were trampled underfoot, caught for several minutes behind the pneumatically locked doors of the two trains.

Cab Telescoped.

The two killed were the motorman of the second train and a passenger standing beside him. Their car was telescoped five feet into the rear car of the train ahead.

It was the worst New York subway crash since Christmas Eve, 1928, when 17 persons were fatally injured in a wreck at Times Square.

The trains involved in today's crash were southbound on the Lexington avenue line of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. They crashed at 116th street. Police said only the fact that the coaches were steel prevented a higher casualty list.

Both the trains were locals. The departure of the first from the 116th street station was delayed slightly when a woman passenger, Esther Marza, was caught in a car door. Somebody jerked an emergency cord, stopping the train. Miss Marza was released.

Like Quake in Street.

The train had just started again when the following train rammed into it. Up on the street, passersby and storekeepers said the impact felt like an earthquake.

Electric wiring insulation burst into flame, fuses blew out. The trains, the subway and the screaming passengers were plunged into darkness. Some of the wood-and-cane coach seats caught fire.

Emanuel Auerbach, 33, of the Bronx, on his way, as were most of the other passengers, to work in Manhattan, was killed instantly. The motorman, Salvatore Cota, lived in his smashed cab for half an hour before an emergency squad crew with acetylene torches could cut its way to his side.

Two surgeons amputated his right leg to free him, but he died an hour later.

Mayor La Guardia, who hurried to the scene in a police radio car, knelt beside the dying man as the surgeons worked, then ordered a thorough investgiation by police.

Broke Rule

The statement accused Cota of failure to "observe a long-standing rule that no train shall proceed into a station until the train ahead has entirely cleared the station."

Fullen said Cota had clear visibility for more than 1,000 feet, and "should have seen the four red lights of the train ahead of him.

"Apparently he saw the first train begin to move out of the station and took it for granted it would continue on its way. Figuring it would be out of the station in a few moments, he put on full speed."

Britain Faces Cabinet Crisis On Spain's War

Chamberlain May Resign in Collapse of Plan to End Conflict.

By the United Press.

London, Aug. 22.—British cabinet ministers were instructed tonight to hold themselves available as Prime Minister Chamberlain hurried back to London from a vacation and confronted a grave situation growing out of collapse of the 27-nation plan to withdraw all foreign "volunteers" from Spain's battle fronts.

The action of Gen. Franco of the Spanish nationalists in virtually rejecting every point of the plan to give the civil war "back to the Spaniards" struck a vital blow at the keystone of Chamberlain's foreign policy—his pact of friendship with Italy.

Diplomats agreed the wrecking of the volunteers' plan had delayed for months and perhaps completely shattered Chamberlain's hope for putting the pact into effect because it is dependent on Premier Mussolini's withdrawal of his thousands of Blackshirt legionnaires from Franco's armies.

[Dewitt Mackenzie, noted foreign affairs expert of the Associated Press, declared a cabinet crisis loomed, involving a possibility Chamberlain will retire in the fall, giving way to Sir Samuel Hoare, now home secretary.—Editor's note.]

More explosive than the question of Chamberlain's prestige at home, however, was the possibility Gen. Franco has thrown down the bars for a surge of fresh Italian and German intervention in Spain's "Little World War," including men, guns and ammunition.

It was admitted privately Franco, by attaching a maze of qualifications and counter-suggestions, to the Nonintervention Committee's volunteers withdrawal plan, has killed it.

Viscount Halifax, British foreign secretary, also cut short a country holiday to join Chamberlain in London and tomorrow they will meet with key cabinet ministers and Earl Plymouth, chairman of the nonintervention sub-committee, to determine whether any part of the scheme can be salvaged.

Franco could hardly have hurled his bombshell into the international pit at a worse time.

For nearly a year the "volunteer" plan has been projected as the best available means of preventing the Spanish war from engulfing Europe in a general conflict. Loyalists accepted it a month ago and, staunchly supported by Soviet Russia, refuse to even consider Franco's reservations.

Chamberlain and the government fear there may be truth in recent reports Mussolini is sending new Blackshirt reinforcements to France to offset Loyalist "diversion" offensives in eastern Spain.

If this is true, Britain feels France almost certainly will throw open her Pyrenees frontier and permit a flow of arms, men and munitions to Loyalist armies.

Chamberlain's immediate concern will be an attempt to restrain France from opening the border.

Claims Rebels Repulsed.

Hendaye, France (Tuesday), Aug. 22.—Spanish loyalists today claimed its troops were turning back the enemy in the gigantic battle involving 150,000 loyalists and insurgents in the Ebro Valley of eastern Spain.

A Barcelona war communique said loyalist troops smashed continuous nationalist attacks, inflicting "enormous losses."

A Franco communique at Alcaniz, however, said 1,283 loyalists were captured and "further important positions were occupied in desperate fighting in the Ebro sector."

Japanese Exports To U.S. Drop 47%

San Francisco, Aug. 22. (AP).—Commerce Department reports showed today imports into the United States from Japan dropped 47 per cent in the first half of this year from the value recorded in the 1937 period. Exports to Japan were down 24 per cent.

Strong influences affecting the trade flow were the unpopularity of the China conquest in this country, and the necessities facing Japan for purchase abroad of important war commodities.

ber of Commerce has maintained an active interest in this essential threat to the well being of community life," he stated. "The national organization, like the Washington Junior Board, believes a permanent continuing program of education and research will contribute appreciably to the solution of this major problem of safety."

H. C. Wright, motorcycle policeman attached to the Twelfth Precinct, received minor knee injuries when his motrcycle was struck by an automobile operated by Julius Latvinsky, 18, of the 700 block of Ninth street northwest. Wright was treated at Casualty Hospital and permitted to return home. Latvinsky was not held.

Lulu M. Smith, 16, Barnes lane, northeast, while sitting in a parked car at the west end of Benning road northeast, received slight knee injuries when the automobile was struck from behind by another car.

At the same time, John Dabney Broadus, colored, 74, of Upper Marlboro, died yesterday in Gallinger Hospital, from injuries received when his car overturned in near-by Maryland Saturday.

Following a conference yesterday, District recreational officials announced playgrounds would continue operation until September 19, the day public schools reopen. Playgrounds normally close September 1.

Attending the conference were Lewis Barrett, co-ordinator of recreation; Sybil Baker, supervisor of District playgrounds, and Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peoples, of the Community Center Department.

Extension of the three-cent bus and streetcar fare, now used for school children, to youngsters going to and from playgrounds was advocated last night in a resolution adopted by the Washington Council of the American Youth Congress, meeting at the Y. W. C. A.

The council pledged co-operation with the citizens advisory committee in the traffic safety campaign and announced its willingness to aid in formation of a Junior Safety Club. A. Y. C. members also will mimeograph and distribute guides to existing recreational facilities, believing the location of various parks and playgrounds is not sufficiently well known throughout the city.

Addressing the group of 100, Washington I. Cleveland, District manager for the American Automobile Association, stressed courtesy as one of the fundamental rules of the roads. Others, he said, are: signal correctly; never take a chance; inspect your car's equipment regularly; use horn only when necessary and start on time to keep appointments.

Sybil Baker told the council new playgrounds are not as essential as a program to make existing facilities more attractive. In the area between Florida avenue and V street and North Capitol street and Fifteenth street northwest, however, she pointed out that very little play space is available and that traffic is extremely heavy.

The District Commissioner yesterday sent to all department heads the approved recommendations of the Citizens Advisory Committee on Traffic Safety to enlist their support in the drive to promote safety on Washington streets and highways.

Walter Miller, member of the Washington Junior Board of Commerce, was appointed as the local representative of the National Committee on Highway and Traffic Safety by Ebeling.

Pittman Praises Administration's Foreign Policies

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 22 (AP).—Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, praised the foreign policies of the Roosevelt Administration tonight in an address before national officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars at the organization's thirty-ninth encampment.

He said he believed this would be an "unfortunate time to consider amendment of the Constitution to provide that questions of foreign policy affecting peace and war should be submitted to all of the citizens" for determination.

At the opening session of the encampment today Senator Lee (Democrat), Oklahoma, received a standing ovation when he denounced war profiteering and promised a strenuous battle to secure passage of a war profits taxation bill in the next session of Congress.

New Shelterbelts.

Lincoln, Neb., Aug. 22 (AP).—Seven thousand miles of new field shelterbelts—enough to protect 2,000,000 acres of crop land—are growing on farms from North Dakota to the Texas Panhandle and already are demonstrating their worth, F. A. Silcox, chief of the United States Forest Service, said today.

Civil Service Employes Handed Warning to Stay Out of Politics urged the sale of 124 Government ships to the Boston Iron & Metal Co., and became angry when Secretary of Commerce delayed delivery.

Tydings

Answering Lewis yesterday, Tydings said:

"Charges that I lobby for big business or anything or anybody else are the most ridiculous thing in the world. When I am in the Senate, I stand up on the floor and am either for something or against it. I have never lobbied for anybody."

Representative Lewis will bring his campaign into nearby Prince Georges County tonight, talking at Branchville, two miles north of College Park, at 8 p. m.

Apropos the Civil Service Commission warning, Forsyth recently told the commission that many workers in the Navy Yard, Government Printing Office and Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Naval Academy, belonged to the Central Labor Union, which has indorsed Representative Lewis.

Unionists Told of Ruling.

At a meeting last night of executives of Locals 174 and 193 of the machinists' union, however, Forsyth told Lewis enthusiasts they would be unable to participate actively in the campaign because of the civil service ruling. He said Government-employed machinists could join the Lewis-for-Senator Club of Prince Georges County, "but not go beyond that."

Some activities forbidden to classified employes were announced as:

"Distributing campaign literature, badges or buttons, or wearing such budge or button; distributing or displaying campaign stickers, signs or pictures of candidates on automobiles or in windows; assuming political leadership or becoming prominently identified with any political movement, party or faction, or with the success or failure of any candidate for election to public office."

Grain Surplus Lowers Prices To Rival 1933

Farm

in October, 1933), has fallen to a level making cotton loans to farmers mandatory under the farm act. The drop in wheat prices made wheat loans mandatory last month. Meantime the AAA announced distribution of $127,000,000 in price adjustment payments on 1937 cotton will begin in September.

Indications were that a corn-loan program will be necessary in November, at the rate of about 58 cents a bushel. Although farmers were asked to plant 20 per cent less corn this year, the outlook was for a crop only 30,000,000 bushels less than the farm act fixed as excessive.

Administration concern at the situation was evidenced by Secretary Wallace's week-end visit to Hyde Park and his efforts to work out a wheat-export subsidy agreement with Canada.

Both the wheat subsidy plan, contemplating subsidized export of 100,000,000 bushels, and the new cotton-loan program, paralleling the wheat rate, were due for announcement this week.

Surplus Problems Faced.

Meantime, farmers drew some consolation from Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports that their farm dollars, fewer in number, actually are each worth $1.06 compared with last year.

The bureau said that the purchasing power of the farm dollar, in terms of commodities the farmer buys, is 6 per cent higher than last year.

Despite extraordinary AAA efforts to hold up prices and hold down output, serious surplus problems were faced in other farm commodities, including potatoes and dairy products.

Twenty-seven Florence, S. C., tobacco farmers have filed suit to restrain warehousemen from collecting penalties for tobacco sold in excess of farm quotas.

Federal Judge L. D. Lide ruled in Florence yesterday that he did not "deem it proper at this stage of the case to decide the question of law involved" but indicated a decision later.

According to the Associated Press, he ruled the case remain as it is; that an injunction would not prevent the warehousemen from collecting the penalties; that the funds be impounded in the registry of the court and that the court deposit all impounded funds in a bank designated by the United States Treasury until the higher courts could pass on Constitutionality of the case.

'Purge' Aids Reds' Plans, Dies Inquiry Told; Writer Links Shirley Temple to Communists

among "thousands of careless or indifferent citizens" who lent their names to the Communist Party for propaganda purposes.

As reporters vainly racked their brains to recall instances in which the young actress, No. 1 at the movie box-office, had converted any prospects to Red doctrines, Matthews continued by naming Clark Gable, Robert Taylor, and James Cagney as similar "fronts" for the Communists. He blurted:

"In fact, the Communists have signed up virtually everybody in Hollywood except Mickey Mouse and Snow White."

"What about Charlie McCarthy?" dryly queried Representative Starnes (Democrat), Alabama, as the audience snickered.

"The Communists have so many Charlie McCarthy's of their own they don't need wooden ones," snapped Matthews.

The committee, which Chairman Dies (Democrat), Texas, claims already has spent its $25,000 appropriation for 10 days of hearings, will recess after today's hearings to meet again at an unrevealed destination "to inquire into some very urgent matters," according to Dies.

Thomas Repressed.

A Republican member, Representative Thomas, of New Jersey, created a minor furore before the session recessed last night when he strove to ask Matthews to indicate similarities between the New Deal and the German dictatorship.

Representative Starnes vigorously objected to such a question, saying: "This committee is not interested in partisan politics nor disputes between trade unions."

Thomas retorted: "I want to try and show that high Government officials in this city are under the influence of Communists."

"This committee," said Starnes, "doesn't want to lay itself open to partisan charges."

Matthews, Dies' star witness and a forceful man, described himself as a "fellow traveler" of the American Commuhists. His presentation of the method by which the Communists plan destruction of the Democratic Party as the first move in erection of "a Soviet America" began with the Presidential purge now under way.

He termed the effort by the Workers Alliance to defeat Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, who is opposed by the President, a good illustration of red tactics in driving a "wedge" into the regular parties.

Representative Mason (Republican), of Illinois, had called attention to a report that the Alliance, composed of WPA workers, and described as another "Communist front" was raising a $50,000 fund to aid in defeating O'Connor.

Matthews claimed communism has made "enormous strides" in the last four years, "more than they ever dreamed of making." The red organizer identified the 60 Congressmen allegedly communistic as those who signed a greeting to the Spanish Loyalist government last year.

The Hollywood stars, including also Bette Davis and Miriam Hopkins, who "loaned their names to communism," did so, Matthews said, when they sent greetings to the French newspaper "Ce Soir," which he charged is "owned outright" by Communists.

Matthews, after terming New Deal and Communist objectives alike, in many instances, went on to assert that Communists have set up "nuclei" in many key industries, including submarine plants in Connecticut. Further, they are established in Army ranks and have concluded an agreement with Harry Bridges, West Coast director for John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization, to tie up all Pacific shipping with sabotage if the United States enters a war adverse to Red interests, according to Matthews.

"Boring Within" the Press.

He further charged Communists are "boring from within" in the country's press, naming the New York Times, the Hearst newspapers, and the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance.

Matthews said that much of his information on "sabotage plans" came from Donald Henderson, former member of Columbia University's faculty. He said:

"Henderson assured us that Communists have already placed several men in strategic places in important industrial plants where they would be in a position to sabotage vital processing in event of war—if, for instance, the United States should become involved in conflict with the Soviet Union. Henderson was especially boastful of a revolutionary nucleus in submarine plants in Connecticut, and of the work of Harry Bridges in the shipping industry on the Pacific Coast."

Heywood Broun, newspaper columnist and president of the American Newspaper Guild, an affiliate of the C. I. O., was charged by Matthews with telling him that he was withdrawing from the Socialist Party to work for the Communists.

Broun smiled and, later, on the witness stand, read a statement saying that "neither under the seal of secrecy nor publicly did I tell Matthews I was withdrawing from the Socialists to work for the Communists. As a matter of fact, I quit the Socialists because I was irked by party discipline.

"I had been called up on the carpet for writing a column in which I spoke well of Al Smith. Remember, that was six years ago . . . I am for C. I. O. leadership and I favor the loyalist cause in Spain. I am against fascism and I am for peace and democracy. I am not a Communist and never have been."

He added: "Before you shut me off I want to tell you the committee is wasting its time."

Japan's Troops In Key Towns Near Hankow

Infantry Fights Way Into Environs; Guerrillas Attack Shanghai.

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Tuesday), Aug. 23.—Japanese infantrymen today fought their way into the environs of Juichang and Matouchen, two key cities to the inner defenses of China's provisional capital, Hankow, while their comrades in the Shanghai area were repulsing mass attacks by more than 50,000 Chinese guerrillas who had concentrated southwest of the great port city.

Both sides were attacking with everything they had, realizing that a turning point of the war may be at hand if the Japanese take the Wu-Han (Wuchang, Hankow and Hanyang) area—traditional military heart of China.

Traitors Slain.

Developments included:

In Shanghai Chinese terrorists shot and critically wounded two "traitors" serving the Japanese-dominated Central China government in Nanking.

The question of the Japanese Navy's virtual blockade of the Yangtse River between Wuhu and Kiukiang, against which Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the United States Asiatic fleet, has been protesting, continued unsettled but diplomats described the attitude of the Japanese as "conciliatory" following instructions from Tokyo that the Japanese government feels the time has come to placate both Great Britain and the United States.

The Japanese army command has sent a letter to Brigadier A. P. D. Telfer-Smollett, British commander in Shanghai, apologizing for the actions of two agents of the special service section of the Japanese army who invaded the British defense sector of the International Settlement on August 13 and terrorized Chinese who were flying the Chinese Nationalist flag.

U. S. "Neutrality" Assailed.

Clashes between Chinese Nationalists and the Japanese continued in Shanghai, however, and a Japanese sentry on Chapoo Bridge over Soochow Creek bayonetted a Chinese laborer who attempted to cross the bridge without a pass. The Japanese were searching all Chinese who entered their defense sector.

Newspapers in Hankow bitterly attacked the United States in commenting on President Roosevelt's speeches in Canada last week and the radio address of Secretary of State Cordell Hull pledging the United States to defend democratic systems. The editorial asserted that declarations by the President and members of his Cabinet supporting world peace and justice are meaningless as long as Americans continue to sell munitions to such "aggressor nations" as Japan.

Sheriff, Witness In Harlan Labor Trial Wounded

Harlan, Ky., Aug. 22 (AP).—A deputy sheriff and a Harlan anti-labor conspiracy trial defense witness were wounded today in two shootings at Evarts, Ky.

Vernon Kelly, 23, was shot through the chest, and Deputy Sheriff John Ball, 39, brother of Sheriff C. C. Ball, of Harlan County, was shot in the side and left arm.

Early today Kelly was wounded by Deputy Sheriff Loney Steele when the deputy went to serve a search warrant on him. Deputy Sheriff Ball went to Evarts to serve new warrants (charging "banding and confederating" to prevent Vernon's arrest on Vernon's brother, Murphy, and father, John Kelly.

Sheriff Ball said Murphy refused to permit the deputy to serve the warrant, jumped behind a tree and began shooting, wounding Deputy Ball. Murphy Kelly escaped into the mountains.

S. C. Primary August 30 First Test of 'Purge'

Smith's Defeat or Victory Will Be Clew to New Deal's Hold.

By the United Press.

Forthcoming primaries in South Carolina and California August 30 held the political limelight last night as possible yardsticks to measure effectiveness of President Roosevelt's intervention in Democratic contests in three other States —Maryland, New York and Georgia.

Of the two primaries scheduled for August 30, the South Carolina contest, involving the seat of Senator Smith, veteran Democratic conservative, is the most significant. The outcome may indicate to a large extent voter trends in nearby Georgia, where the New Deal is opposing Senator George, and in Maryland, where Mr. Roosevelt repudiated Senator Tydings.

Prefers Johnson.

Although the President did not denounce Smith, as he did Tydings, George and Representative O'Connor (Democrat), New York, he indicated preference for youthful Gov. Olin D. Johnston, ardent New Dealer, who is considered Smith's major opponent. The third candidate is State Senator Edgar Brown, who also professes Administration leanings.

Smith, who, with George and Tydings, helped scuttle the Supreme Court enlargement plan last year, has been waging a heated fight in the South Carolina "circus" campaign. The road show ends Friday when the candidates will return to their homes and await election returns.

As chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, Smith often has crossed swords with the Administration. Recently Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, declining to discuss Smith, said, however, that he favored "anything that will help the farmer."

California Issue Simpler.

The California issue is more simple. The President merely has asked renomination of 75-year-old Senator McAdoo, Administration supporter, who is opposed by a handful of aspirants, all but one claiming allegiance to New Deal objectives.

Meantime, Senator George's New Deal-blessed opponent in the Georgia primary, U. S. District Attorney Lawrence Camp, made capital of the fact that the incumbent had received the indorsement of Republican National Committeeman James W. Arnold. Camp contended that the indorsement definitely placed George in the Republican fold.

On another political front, reports persisted that Senator Pope, Idaho New Dealer whose defeat gave the Administration its most severe election setback this year, may be pressured into seeking re-election as an independent against his successful opponent, Representative Clark.

George Blames Reds.

By the United Press.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 22.—Two high Federal officials were labeled as communists today by Senator George as Georgia candidates for the United States Senate threw their campaign machines into high gear for an increasingly bitter Democratic primary.

George, speaking at Monroe, claimed a "little group" of "communists . . . trying to drive me out of office" includes Thomas G. Corcoran, special counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Benjamin V. Cohen, general counsel of the national power policy committee of the Public Works Administration; James Ford, "the Negro nominee of the Communist Party for Vice President, and E. L. Oliver, executive vice president of Labor's Non-Partisan League, which has "blacklisted" George.

Hits Canada Pledge.

George, whom Georgia voters were advised by President Roosevelt to defeat in the September 14 primary, also criticized Mr. Roosevelt for stating that the United States would aid Canada in event Canada were invaded.

"The President of the United States alone cannot carry this Nation into war," George declared. "He must have the vote of the House and Senate."

Meantime, Lawrence S. Camp, the President's choice in the Senate campaign, told a Carnesville rally that George was the "representatives of private utilities, trusts and big business."

Gov. Lehman Still In Good Graces, Farley Indicates

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 22.—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman was removed from President Roosevelt's "purge" list today by James A. Farley at close of the Democratic State Committee meeting, at which he presided as chairman, when he announced that the President and the Governor would be consulted on their choice for temporary chairman of the Democratic State convention, which will be held at Rochester September 29.

The Governor was supposed to have been placed on the "purge" list for opposing the President's Supreme Court bill.

The State committee had adopted a resolution empowering a special committee, to be named by Farley, to select the temporary chairman of the convention.

Beltsville Scientists Specialize in Mass Fly Production and Liquidation

Science Plays Nurse to Flies To Discover How to Kill Them

Beltsville Laboratory Breeds Pests in Government's Effort to Find More Efficient Insecticide; Researchers Prefer Flypaper for Own Use.

The best is none too good for the Department of Agriculture's private swarm of flies, from the day they are born at the Beltsville, Md., Research Center to the moment they are scientifically destroyed.

Selected insects feed off small wads of sterilized cotton batting soaked in pasteurized milk, which are placed in the "stock cages" every morning. Nourished by the Bureau of Entomology, the brood flies settle down on cotton to deposit egg matter, which averages 5,000 embryonic flies to the cubic centimeter.

Eggs placed in a moist mixture of alfalfa meal and wheat bran hatch into worm-like larvae and within a week emerge from the pupa stage as full-fledged flies, ready for the executioner.

Mass production and extermination of flies at the rate of 250,000 units a year, have been carried out by the bureau since 1928, under direction of Dr. E. R. McGovran. Twofold purpose of the project is to test synthetic insecticides which appear on the market and determine the effectiveness of new domestic varieties of plants which contain substances fatal to flies.

"Most of the pyrethum (a poisonous material which paralyzes and kills insects) now comes from abroad, particularly from Japan," Dr. McGovran explained yesterday. "Under the present troubled circumstances, the quality has become inferior."

Last year the entomologists experimented with extracts from 840 different plants. Those which prove effective are recommended to the plant industry people, who direct their experimental stations throughout the country to concentrate on the satisfactory plants and forget about the others.

Despite the abundance of gleaming lethal contraptions in the Beltsville laboratories, the entomologists still use an old-fashioned gum-covered strip of fly-paper to keep stray flies from bothering them while they think up new ways of killing insects.

Nazis Dissatisfy Youth of Austria, Congress Is Told

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Aug. 22 (AP). Dr. Franz Otto, lone Austrian delegate to the Second World Youth Congress, told the gathering today that despite annexation of his country by Germany "the Austrian youth are not conquered."

He left Vienna six weeks after the annexation and stopped in Paris, where he said he will remain "as long as Hitler is in power."

Dr. Otto said he would never return to Austria because "persons like myself are either killed, driven to suicide or exiled."

"National socialism doesn't satisfy the needs of our youth," asserted Dr. Otto, who recently was made an official member of the presiding committee of the congress.

Its action, the committee said, was intended to signify its recognition of Austria as a separate entity and its refusal to recognize the German annexation.

Officials have ascribed 14 butchery deaths in the last four years to the fugitive.

N.Y. Youth Seized As Eicher Burglar After Auto Chase

Following a wild auto chase, police yesterday recovered the stolen car of Representative Edward C. Eicher (Democrat), of Iowa, and arrested a 17-year-old New York youth who, they said, admitted robbing the Congressman's apartment early Sunday.

Standing in front of the Tenth Precinct police station, Policeman G. L. Carter recognized the tag numbers of Representative Eicher's car as it sped past. Hailing a passing cab, he ordered the driver to chase the stolen car. At Thirteenth street and Park road northwest, Policeman J. W. Goves also recognized the car and hailed the same cab.

Together, the two police pursued the stolen car through Rock Creek Park, finally forcing it to the curb. Its youthful driver surrendered.

Illegal Ballot Defeats Measure He Favored

Athens, Ohio, Aug. 22 (AP).—Some voter in the recent Ohio primary was so strongly in favor of the Athens township school bond issue that he marked his ballot in ink, contrary to law. A vote recount today showed that the bond issue had failed to meet a 65 per cent majority by one vote.

Six Die as Train And Auto Crash

Altoona, Kas., Aug. 22 (AP).—A Missouri Pacific passenger train struck a coupe at a grade crossing today, killing six occupants.

The automobile was dragged five blocks through this town by the train. The body of the infant was found on the locomotive.

Pal of 'Enemy No. 1' Boasts of Bravery 'If I'd Had a Gun'

Dallas, Aug. 22 (AP).—Floyd Hamilton and Ted Walters, termed by J. Edgar Hoover "two of the most dangerous characters in the criminal underworld," talked boastfully in jail today while Detective Inspector Will Fritz said robbery victims identified them in seven holdups.

"They've got me in jail all right," Hamilton said, "but I'm not going to be here the rest of my life. They don't make jails like that."

"If I'd had a gun it would have been a different story," Walters told police.

Mercury Only at 88, But Warmer Is Forecast

If you thought yesterday was a scorcher, you were wrong.

At 3:30, hottest point of the afternoon, the mercury merely touched 88 and the humidity was only half as high as it might have been—50 per cent. Coldest hour of the day was 6 a. m., when the thermometer read 69. For today, the Weather Bureau promises fair and slightly warmer.

New Hopes For An Airport.

Relieving five old-line agencies of their divided responsibility, the Civil Aeronautics Authority is now in complete charge of all non-military flying in this country. It takes over at an opportune moment. The aviation industry is on the threshold of that difficult stage of corporate development when extensive refinancing and reorganization are necessary. Being dominated by businessmen rather than technicians, the CAA should afford invaluable assistance in this difficult transition.

This is not to suggest that the new authority is without technical ability. On the contrary, it has been provided with an auxiliary safety board and an advisory committee as well. It is these two groups, composed of outstanding air experts, which attract Washington's particular attention. For the Capital, as even its first citizen has attested, is haunted by fears of an accident which seems certain to occur on its doorstep unless some better airport facilities are soon provided here.

For 12 exasperating years all efforts to correct landing and take-off dangers here have been frustrated. Various special committees have been appointed only to have their usually thoughtful recommendations converted into political footballs and ultimately kicked into oblivion. Public resentment has availed nothing even though aroused by reiterated comments of visiting fliers to the general effect that even one-horse towns have superior landing fields. The Capital looks eagerly to the CAA for an end to this humiliating situation.

The chairman has indicated a sincere interest in equipping Washington with not merely an adequate airport but with an outstanding airport to serve as a model for the country. What site his advisers will recommend for such a reasonable and wholly desirable development is not known. But it will be the hope of all who travel or will travel by air that the selection will be made with due consideration for the factor of accessibility.

Whatever its other deficiencies, the present airport is admirably convenient. Unfortunately, however, the general consensus of surveys to date has been that it cannot feasibly be expanded to the point demanded by safety. If this is the case, some other location, such as Gravelly Point, already in the process of filling, seems the next best bet.

The 40-Hour Week.

Premier Daladier's disavowal of the 40-hour week law is a desperate effort to end the downward economic drift in France. Various other methods have been tried. The franc has been devalued, emergency finance powers have been exercised by the government and numerous modifications in the 40-hour week have been permitted. But the basic weakness has not yet been corrected.

Reports from Paris indicate some improvement in the situation as compared with last year. The surplus of imports has been reduced. Tourist trade has been substantially increased, and wholesale prices have moved somewhat lower. But the low level of national production continues to cause the government grave anxiety. The national income, M. Daladier points out, has slumped from 49,000,000,000 gold francs in 1931 to 22,000,000,000 in 1937. To reverse that trend he insists that increased production is essential. So the 40-hour week is to be set aside in the interests of national stability and general recovery.

Resignations handed to M. Daladier by his ministers of public works and labor emphasize the political dangers of the course he has taken. The Socialists, who are largely responsible for the 40-hour week law, are certain to resent its abandonment. If labor is compelled to yield while no similar sacrifice is required of capital, the Socialists will have a popular argument against the government when Parliament reconvenes.

Actually, however, French workingmen appear to have gained very little from the 40-hour week law. More leisure without wage cuts has been offset by higher living costs. Interpretation of the statute has become so broad that it offers rather limited protection. Moreover, protracted animosities between capital and labor form a major cause of France's downward spiral of industrial production. The ultimate result of such a trend does not promise benefit to any group.

No doubt Premier Daladier anticipates that abandonment of the 40-hour week will hasten the repatriation of capital and provide a real stimulus to French industry. If hoarded and expatriated funds fail to respond to this bid for increased production, a new crisis will certainly arise. Exchange control, in that event, might well be unavoidable. Before considering any such far-reaching step, however, M. Daladier is wisely making a less drastic effort to revitalize the national economy.

Senator Tydings Replies.

When President Roosevelt assailed Senator Tydings as one who has "betrayed the New Deal in the past and will again" the words lost none of their sting because they were first printed in a newspaper editorial and then adopted by the Chief Executive as his own.

Indeed, there was something doubly aggressive in using the New York Evening Post as a flail with which to excoriate a Maryland Senator. It emphasized the seeming indifference of the White House to all the pride of locality, all the devotion to home rule, which are such deep-rooted instincts in Maryland. If there had to be Presidential intervention in the Maryland primary it might have been launched more happily than through the parroted opinions of a New York newspaper.

So Senator Tydings, after taking several days to consider the character of his reply, chose wisely in emphasizing the "Maryland Free State" issue. The phrase is only partially sentimental. It has a meaning to the people of Maryland which is none the less real because uncomprehended by those for whom State loyalties and traditions have little significance. Maryland is an old State and a proud State. And Senator Tydings knows both its people and its history of three centuries of successful self-government.

It was, therefore, both natural and adroit for the Senator to reply to the President by stressing the fundamental and inalienable right of Maryland to choose its representatives in Congress without a semblance of Federal coercion. "If we lose that right," said Mr. Tydings in his radio speech of Sunday night, "we surrender the sovereign authority of our State; we destroy its traditions; we create a precedent which will weaken other States. We place the representative branch of the government under the control of the Chief Executive."

This effort to preserve local self-government against the encroachments of centralized authority has always been a basic tenet of the Democratic Party. And in stressing it Senator Tydings effectively counters more than the President's assertion that he has "betrayed the New Deal." He also meets the charge of his opponent, Congressman Lewis, that the Senator "is no longer a real Democrat, but a Tory Republican."

Campaign amenities often do more to obscure than to clarify issues. When Mr. Lewis opines that Senator Tydings is no longer a Democrat he also opens the further question of whether President Roosevelt himself can any longer properly be considered in that classification. And it is that further question which is disturbing the minds of many Maryland Democrats as September 12 approaches.

Senator Tydings, in his radio speech, accepted the challenge thrown to him by the President on August 16. In his address to the "men and women of Maryland" he sought to draw the line of conflict clearly rather than to becloud it with animadversions or extraneous criticisms. He did not, because he could not, assert that Mr. Lewis would be an unworthy representative of Maryland in the Senate. But he did, as he should have done, point out that Presidential intervention has made the issue, in Maryland as elsewhere, "the right of our people to pass judgment on their representatives, without fear, intimidation or outside interference."

At first glance it would seem paradoxical that a Senator's effort to secure renomination, in an appeal seemingly limited to members of his party in his own State, should have such national significance. But the paradox is purely superficial.

There is no exaggerating the importance of the issue when this candidate for renomination finds it necessary to say that he is not so much fighting his nominal opponent as "the power of the Federal Government directed against me by the Chief Executive and his advisers."

Machine Age Diplomacy.

Establishment in the Department of State of a new Division of International Communications reflects the ever-widening scope of what is involved in the phrase "foreign affairs."

Time was when diplomacy concerned itself almost wholly with political matters—with wars and preparations for war, with peace and the means of maintaining it. These activities remain paramount. But they tell only part of the story of present-day dealings across national frontiers.

Because of science and invention the world is steadily shrinking. Once relatively simple, relations between nations become increasingly complex. The Department of State and the foreign offices of other lands now concern themselves with fields of action which were never dreamt of a century or less ago.

In no particular is this more true than with respect to means of communication—aviation, shipping, radio, telephone, cable and telegraph. More and more, during recent years, problems arising out of the use of these media have become the concern of all governments. Their number and variety have grown so rapidly as to make desirable the creation of a new division in the Department of State to integrate the handling of problems in the communications field.

Secretary Hull has made the step easier by having built up from among State Department membership a corps of experts on these problems. The only addition from outside is the new division chief, Mr. Thomas Burke, whose ability for the post has been revealed both in business and, more recently, as an officer of the Department of Commerce.

A Blow For Chamberlain.

Through his belated and uncompromising reply to the British proposal for the withdrawal of foreign combatants from Spain, Gen. Franco has probably pricked the bubble of Neville Chamberlain's fondest hope—the prompt initiation of the Anglo-Italian agreement. In so doing he has placed the British prime minister in an unenviable position. But the Nationalist generalissimo has also revealed in unmistakeable fashion how utterly dependent he is on foreign aid.

Last April the British government declared in an exchange of notes with Italy that it "regarded the settlement of the Spanish question as a prerequisite of the entry into force of the agreement between our own governments." Such a settlement appeared, at that time, just over the horizon as Franco's troops were then sweeping all before them.

But the anticipated victory was not won. Under the circumstances, the Anglo-Italian agreement, if it were to come into force at all, would have to do so through some other means than a speedy triumph for the insurgents. When that fact was realized in London, the British government sought to hurry the disunited non-intervention committee into approving the British plan for the withdrawal of foreign "volunteers" from both sides in Spain.

For obvious reasons this plan could not go into force unless and until it had the approval of the Barcelona and the Burgos governments. But this, it was believed in London, would not prove an insuperable obstacle. Both sides had something to gain thrcugh the operations of the withdrawal plan.

Withdrawal from the Nationalist side of any large numbers of Italians and Germans, even though accompanied by a proportionate withdrawal of Russians, French and others from the government side, was deemed advantageous to Barcelona. On the other hand the promise was held out to Franco that if the plan went into force belligerent rights would be extended to him. And as an evidence of good faith the French government temporarily closed the Spanish frontier to all arms shipments.

But while the Barcelona regime proved favorable—its affirmative reply reached London only two weeks after the plan was transmitted to both sides—Franco delayed his reply for six weeks. He has now sent a note to London which in all essential particulars constitutes a categorical rejection. His reply consists, with minor and unimportant concessions, of one long succession of resounding noes, so much so, in fact, that it will take all the practiced ingenuity of the British Foreign Office to make it the basis of further negotiations.

Squads, Wrong Dress!

It is being said on Capitol Hill that certain anti-war societies are under Communist influence. The charge seems to be strengthened in some degree by current indications that peace advocates have developed a boring-from-within technique which smacks strongly of Moscow. Its effect can be seen in the new uniforms designed for the Army.

So far as color goes, the proposed new military garb is fine. There is some slight dissension concerning the shade of blue selected, but any change from olive drab is a gain. However, when it comes to design the models show about the lumpiest lines conceivable. This is where the fine hand of the peace enthusiasts appears. Quite evidently they inspired the pattern as a means of taking the glamour out of soldiering and thus dampening enthusiasms for war.

The result is a sad blow to the males of the Nation. Had the Army led the way, the long awaited revolution in men's clothing might have begun. What is needed particularly is a change in summer wear. As an aid to sweltering, there is nothing to equal today's shirt tightly belted in below and as hermetically buttoned at the top.

At least the necktie, that abomination descended from the halters imposed by a tyrant on a subject people many centuries ago, should be discarded. Admittedly, Mussolini gave this very order recently, only to rescind it because of the Adam's apples exposed. Actually an Adam's apple is no less beautiful than, for instance, an ear. New tastes in such matters might be developed overnight, as the ladies now parading the napes of their necks will attest. But individual men are notorious cowards when it comes to innovation in dress. Now that the Army has failed them there seems to be no alternative to continued discomfort.

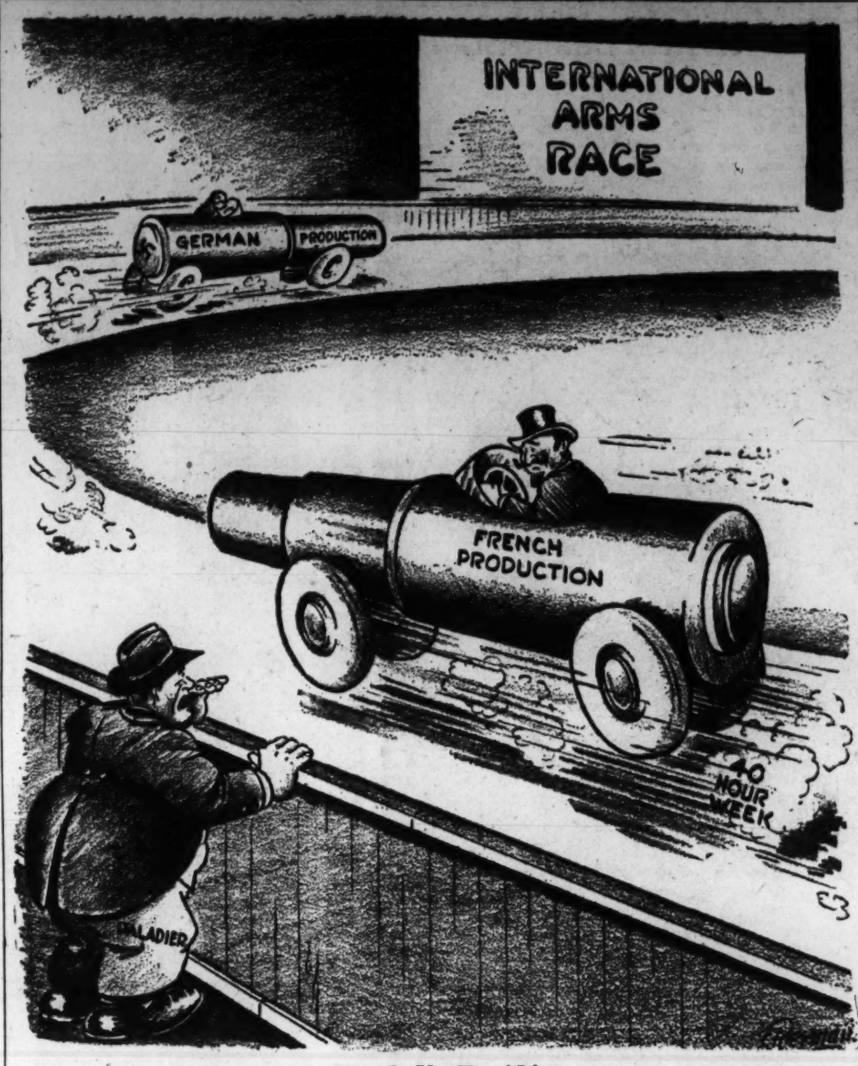
The Federal Government is spending $1,700,000 repairing and renovating the Statue of Liberty. There are many who don't think there's $1,700,000 worth of liberty left in this country.

"Few boys kiss girls against their will these days," says a woman columnist. Yes, ma'am; that's true. Human nature is improving all around. Few parents nowadays force children against their will to eat candy.



Step It Up To 48!

The President's Politics

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Underlying the Purge," is an aptly chosen and informing subject head. The letter of Lynn A. E. Gale is a well-written letter. It is hard to believe that he does not know better in avoiding the "Underlying Reasons for Opposition to a Purge."

In the first place, men are like any other animals. They cater to that group of other men who pet them, and shower the good things of life on them. There is a group, however, that Mr. Gale overlooks. It is the people of a State, or county, or any political unit. There is resentment in a city corporation if the Governor attempts to interfere with a local election. So it is when a Senator is to be elected; there is resentment in having the President, through erroneous advisers of his collegiate staff of brain-trusters, interfere in a State election. There is no denying that the Administration acts at times as though it thought the American people were a bunch of mutton-heads. It talks entirely too much, a habit from those peripatetic press conferences. The office of President calls for weighted thought and careful expressions, both for the purpose of retaining its respect with the people and upholding the Federal Government with dignity and sobriety.

Mr. Gale should read the Constitution with respect to a President's duties. He is supposed to make recommendations to Congress, not to draft proposed bills, and these recommendations are embodied in a message. He consults with the leaders of his party in Congress, not merely outsiders like Cohen and Corcoran, and gets their impressions, and conveys his own. They map out a program. If there is not a majority to put that program through it is up to the people of the different States, if they want the program, to send up Congressmen every two years, and Senators every six years, to put that program through.

There is nowhere any direction that the President shall go out and bludgeon into office candidates selected by his own secretary, as was the case in Marvin H. McIntyre's descent onto Atlanta, and Mr. Camp's drafting followed, without showing even the ordinary decency of resigning his job. Ethics is a foreign word when this Administration comes to the bat.

If there is no interference in Kansas there should be none in Georgia. The plain downright truth of this entire matter is that Mr. Roosevelt has bludgeoned through Congress measures the people did not want by using patronage, and pressure. He sought to get others through. He broke down the clearly defined lines between executive and legislative rights. He carried this violation of the constitutional guarantees further, and thought since he got away with it all in the first case, he could fool the people and disregard time-worn principles of our system of Government and interfere in a State primary.

The people could not voice their objection to the first bludgeoning effectively, or did not, but this primary matter is different. Like a check that has to be indorsed, so the selection of Mr. Roosevelt has to be indorsed before he can get it through, and that is why the public is hollering. They are not fooled. The "yes" type of Congressman is not wanted. Mr. Roosevelt might just as well admit the error of his ways. He is only tearing down himself. One would think he would learn a little as he went along. But apparently not. The people are tired of his legirons. They are tired of politics in the White House.

ANDREW JACKSON'S COUSIN.
Washington, Aug. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Underlying the Purge," and your comment on the letter of Lynn A. E. Gale criticizing your position and defending the "purge," interested me greatly. You raise an important point in your editorial although I believe it is one that can be fully answered by supporters of the President.

After quoting Mr. Gale's assertion that the President has not had a fair opportunity to put his program into effect—because of Congressional opposition—you say: "In their enthusiasm for the New Deal many citizens have apparently forgotten that our Government is one of divided powers . . . but the legislative powers belong to Congress . . ."

It is true that Congress, not the President, should do the legislating, and is responsible to the voters, not to him. But the voters have made their desires very clear in the elections of 1932, 1934, and 1936, and it is perfectly plain that they are in favor of the New Deal. However, the New Deal is only partially in effect and much of its program has been held up by anti-Roosevelt Democrats, in the two houses of Congress. Mr. Roosevelt's request for more legislators who will co-operate with him in completely carrying out his program—which three elections have shown to be the people's own program—is a just and reasonable one.

There is nothing even remotely resembling dictatorship in the President's candid, sincere appeal to the voters. He appeals to them because he, like The Post, recognizes that it is they who elect Congressmen and Senators. He is not dictating at all. He is merely asking the electors to choose additional lawmakers in sympathy with the general policies for which he stands and which the Nation has thrice approved by a tremendous majority.

No patriotic American wants the Executive to override the legislative branch of the Government, but Mr. Roosevelt is making no such attempt whatever. As the head of the party in power, he goes frankly to the voters, showing how impossible it is for him to give his ideas a fair trial when a few obstructionists in Congress can repeatedly checkmate his undertakings. He places the issue squarely up to the people themselves. I am confident that the people will in most districts sustain him and assure him of co-operative lawmakers.

We have had too much of minority rule in this country. A few financial and industrial dictators have too long dominated the Nation. Now, when a majority of the voters is clearly in favor of a program of progressive democracy, it is time to end the injustice by which a small group can defy the public will.

As Democratic candidate for Congressman in the West River District of South Dakota, I have persistently fought the same greedy interests that today stand in the way of Roosevelt's humanitarian policies. I know their unscrupulousness, their resourcefulness, their cunning and their power. I know that fundamental democracy requires their defeat. ARTHUR W. WATWOOD.
Washington, Aug. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If any of those columnists who claim to be able to diagnose the Georgia situation would take the trouble to read Georgia's political experiences and reactions during the period 1919-1920, he would learn that not even the Messianic Wilson, much less his much less admirable former satellite (to perpetrate a wretched pun) could tell even a fair-sized minority of the sovereign electorate whom their votes should be cast for. Other interferences (long after carpetbagging days) had like results.

The best remark I have heard lately is that the principle difference between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Bergen lies in the fact that Mr. Bergen does not desire all Americans for his stooges—only Charlie McCarthy! CITIZEN.
Washington, Aug. 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is the President sincere when he calls New Dealism "progressive democracy?" Can Mr. Roosevelt honestly state he is upholding the principles, embodied in the Constitution—which he twice swore to do? Can he call a one-man (F. D. R.) centralized government democracy?

It is a sad day, for America, when the word and sincerity of its President must be viewed with suspicion. However, he himself is solely responsible for this. Had not Mr. Roosevelt stated: "Any national administration attempting to make laws for the whole people would inevitably result at some future time in a dissolution of the Union itself?" Also: "Congress has not been given the power to legislate on the conduct of public utilities, banks, business, agriculture, social welfare, or a dozen other vital factors." Again: "As a matter of fact and law the governing rights of the States are those not surrendered to the National Government by the Constitution or its amendments."

In reversing himself, Mr. Roosevelt has violated American constitutional democracy. In following his own New Deal logic and consequent reasoning is it to be wondered at that he holds the view that "no force can stop his plans?"

Shall Mr. Roosevelt, or any President, be allowed to wipe out State lines; to select Representatives for the 48 sovereign States, thus making possible the constitutional (?) way for a third term? Would even a third term satisfy Mr. Roosevelt? One generation not being long enough—to carry out "his plan."

The Democraitc Party, the Nation, should accept Mr. Roosevelt's challenge and scuttle the New Deal Party together with its leader. Nothing less can save American democracy. Unless this is done, what can the Nation expect? One of two things:

(1) A continued orgy of spending, entailing the complete confiscation of the wealth of individuals. This to support New Dealers and their created hordes of the idle. (2) An unknown and unpredictable future, when the wealth is gone. Perhaps a revolution; or the Nation divided up into small groups, each wishing to rule. Either would destroy American democracy and civilization.

Salvation lies in scuttling the New Deal before "New Deal Plans" can fully mature; before the people become so weak as to lose all sense of their responsibility to work and earn their own living; before they forget government is for their protection and must be supported by them—not they by it. The people must be taught again this is true democracy.

MARY CHALMERS HOOD.
Florence, Ala., August 17.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have never written to a newspaper before, but sense of duty prompts me to write to you in reply to the attacks which have been made upon your staff artist, Mr. Elderman, whose accuracy has been impugned because he described an attack made upon Senator George as a "stab in the back."

"How," someone has asked, "could that be when the attack was made when the two men—the other being the President—were on the same platform?" How could the Senator have been stabbed at all except by someone on the same platform?

I saw the attack; it was terrible. The Senator was looking at someone in the audience when the knife was buried between his shoulders. As it sunk the President said, "You have never supported a single one of my measures" adding in a very low voice, "except 34." The expression on his face was awful as he twisted the knife around saying "God bless you, Walter, let us always be friends."

As our dear Senator's warm Southern blood gushed forth over the cold Northern hands of Mr. Roosevelt, the lady next to me (a Miss Munroe, from Macon) said "My heavens! George and the dragon. But, the dragon is killing St. George!" The Senator's face was of a wax-like pallor. I thought he murmured "You brute," but Miss Munroe says it was "Et tu, Brute."

It was a sad end of a perfect day. The President had just sent a tall, thin young man he called "Harry" around with relief checks, one for each of us, when the tragedy occurred, spoiling everything.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Upon what sort of baloney doth our imperious editor gorge that he retreats into aggresive begging of the question when logical justification for the President's preferences in primaries is demonstrated?

If an editor in chief from New England or the Pacific Coast wires his subordinates to oppose New Deal candidates in Maryland or Georgia I guess that's something else again—hot dog!

The Post Impressionist

Ubasti.

IN CONNECTION with the cool reception given the goddess Ubasti upon her arrival at the Art Museum of St. Louis by the citizens of that city, it is interesting to note that the lady in question retains her abstract calm. She seems to be saying, like Queen Victoria, that what the people of St. Louis think of her is immaterial; the important thing is what she thinks of them.

Now the goddess Ubasti, sometimes called Bubastis, was one of the many cat deities of ancient Egypt, and her position in Egyptian mythology seems to parallel that of Artemis in the Greek. Unlike many other of the feline ladies, she was of a pleasant and playful disposition, which probably accounted for her popularity among the folk who walked in profile along the Nile. Festivals were held in her honor which, in the discreet terms of the Encyclopedia Brittanica, were "very riotous affairs."

I am not saying that $14,400 would not be spent more wisely in welfare projects than upon deified cats, but I still hold that the old Egyptians had the right idea regarding their Tabbies and Toms, even if they did carry the matter a bit too far. Personally, I don't fancy burying my cats in the family cemetery lot, nor would I put up with ceaseless midnight yowlings on the basis of their sanctity, but on the whole, the genus feline has my deep respect and affection.

* * *

Clarence Day, in "This Simian World" points out how very fortunate we humans are to have had our origin with the race of monkeys. That is all very nice, since our simian characteristics undoubtedly have their pleasant angles, but what graceful, charming creatures we would be if we were descended from cats.

We would have been born with the gift of appearing at our best on all occasions, for whoever heard of a dowdy cat? We would know by instinct where and how to pose ourselves in order to make the most effective picture. And above all, we would possess that superb self-consciousness that would permit us to withdraw from all superficial disturbances into the fascinating realm of our own personalities, which is the essence of true relaxation. I've never known a cat with a nervous breakdown.

* * *

As I write this, I glance from time to time at our two pets—first at Flambeau, the arrogant Persian. By what means does he know that the big green rum bottle (unfortunately empty) makes an excellent background for his flaming orange coat? Some cynic might suggest that he finds the glass cool to his tawny belly as he curls around it, but there are other cool spots in the house which he ignores.

And Tom, sleek and black and green-eyed, who might be a reincarnation of Ubasti's boy friend, sits by the hour watching the gold fish disporting in their globe. Some might suspect a sinister motive, but not I. I give Tom credit for an instinctive sense of composition, and the result is just the proper balance of line and color, of stillness and movement, of midnight sable and golden scales.

* * *

Cats are playful and frolicsome by nature, but theirs is the art of complete quiet. A tabby curled on a chair is my idea of a picture of a perfect state of Nirvana—differing, I am afraid, from the orthodox Buddhist conception. It all depends upon whether Nirvana means self-forgetfulness or self-absorption.

I know a charming and brilliant woman holding a highly responsible position, the demands of which require an inexhaustible supply of nervous energy. By night she is fagged mentally and physically. Does she take a bromide and creep to bed? She does not. She sits in a comfortable chair, sips a glass of sherry, and watches the cat. Before a half hour passes, her taut nerves are relaxed and she is ready for the evening.

I have no intention of urging anyone to go watch the goddess Ubasti and relax. The effect of black Tom is salutary enough for me, and I do not doubt that the Nation is full of cats that would answer the purpose even if they are not expensive bronzes. Line is line and beauty is beauty and I cannot help feeling a kinship with the ancient sculptor who probably made his model for Ubasti of clay dug from pits by the banks of the Nile. Neither men nor cats have changed greatly in the intervening centuries and Tom watching the goldfish strikes much the same pose as the bronze Ubasti. And if at night, when I set the alarm and give him a gentle shove with the toe of my slipper, perhaps I feel a twinge of envy for that immense sense of personal dignity that survives even the bouncer's boot.

* * *

So here's to you, Ubasti, and your kind. May you stretch in the sun and howl happily in the dark of the moon. May you have your fill of fish and lap countless saucers of cream, and scratch Anubis on the nose if he barks at you. May you survive long enough for our simian race to study the fine balance of your tension and repose and profit by what it observes. And above all, may we learn to relax.

Fair Enough

Cross-Handed Pianists.

A MAN called up and said he had some tickets for Jose Iturbi, the piano player, and I asked, "does he do it cross-handed?"

"Does he do it cross-handed?" he said; "Brother, he does it cross-handed, back-handed, blindfolded, anything you wish. Why?"

So I said I would pass it up because . . .

Well, one time they were having winter in Florida. No chumps, no fix, plenty of Prohibition trouble and the boats were sailing right on past Miami for Cuba.

You could see their lights in the night offshore.

That winter my friend, Mr. Cutey Pearce, had a nice little plant where he was prepared to deal a high-class line of wines, liquors and cigars, rare viands and exotic delicacies, and he would sit there night after night, eating cream cheese and Worcestershire sauce on crackers and sniffing beer out of the safe, and snarling at those boats going by.

He didn't like Cuba too much because he jockeyed a charger in Cuba with the U. S. Cavalry in '98, and now look what the ingrates were doing to him.

• • • •

SOME PEOPLE called Mr. Pearce Laddy-Buck Pearce, but that was a mistake for Lady Book Pearce. He was sometimes known as Laddy-Buck Pearce because he wrote a little business around the track occasionally, and, somehow became the favorite bookmaker of the lady trade. So Mr. E. Phocian Howard called him Lady Book Pearce and unknowing persons twisted this into Laddy-Buck. It was not unbecoming, because Mr. Pearce is a man of charm with his bright, black eyes, his light oak complexion, his actoresque dash of white at his temples and his wit, manners and gift for pretty compliments.

It was a mistake, but it wasn't a bad fit at that.

This terrible winter Mr. Pearce had in his plant one of those personal service pianists with a little portable horse-face piano about the size of a laundry hamper. The gag was to measure the house and pick a table where some devil was tearing up money for fun, then roll the little box over in the lee of that table and start singing request numbers for the members of the fair sex. This would flatter the chump who was lifting the weight of the party and he would order more wine if he was any gentleman in appreciation of this compliment to his pick. The pianist, if he was any way bright, would soon sense the theme song of the party and give it plenty because music stimulates love, especially with wine behind it, and if a chump felt that he was making any time he was like as not to give the pianist a handsome honorarium.

• • • •

WELL, things were just awful, but one night, what do you know, in pops a live one, a little bald guy, with a great big blue-eyed baby, built like a wrestler and full of high spirits and the mood of dolce far niente. Some like them big. It's a free country. There were about eight in the party, but the little bald guy was the papa. You could see that.

The gentleman ordered wine, which wasn't free but $25 a crock at that time, and Mr. Pearce cracked his hands for that piano mug, but that one had already thrown down his racing form and was bearing down on the table like a taxicab, clouting those keys on the wing. He pulled up alongside with the fancy flourish of a U. S. destroyer and began to bear down on the love angle and the big blonde began to roll her eyes and squeeze the little bald guy's hand. It looked like the rent, all right.

• • • •

BUT pretty soon the piano guy began to play cross-handed. He would sing about love and lean toward the big blonde like he was going to put his head on her chest, and then cross his hands on that keyboard, first the right one over the left, then the left over the right in sweeping, graceful strokes and plink cute licks each time. And pretty soon the big blonde let loose of the little bald guy's hand and put her elbows on the table and her chin on her hands and started heaving and giving that great big blue-eyed business to the piano mug, who didn't have a dime. This lasted about ten minutes until suddenly the little bald guy jumped up, measured the big blonde and busted her a beauty, right on one of her pretty blue eyes. There was a terrible scuffle at that, and after Mr. Pearce had regretfully given the whole party a heave into the evening he came back and fired the pianist.

"Never," Mr. Pearce said to me, "never trust a cross-handed piano player. Make them play it straight, because the minute they begin that cross-handed business they are up to something."

So you can have Jose Iturbi.

Civil Rights Held Important to All

Full enforcement of civil rights for the colored race affords protection to all races and classes within the community, Charles M. Thomas, president of the Civic Associations of the District, declared yesterday at Baltimore before the civil liberty unit of the thirty-ninth annual convention of the Grand Lodge of Colored Elks.

Support for anti-lynching legislation "must be coupled with protests against police brutality toward strikers and other protesting groups, thus assuring civil liberty for all," he said.

In the deep South, the speaker charged, power remains in the hands of a few and citizens merely "have the form of republican government, a shadow without substance."

The Duce's Two Voices

1932	1938
"There are no pure races left. . . . Nothing will ever make me believe that biologically pure races can be shown to exist today.	"The idea of race is a material and an essentially biological conception. The present population of Italy is in its majority Aryan and its civilization is Aryan.
"Amusingly enough, not one of those who have proclaimed the 'nobility' of the Teutonic race was a Teuton himself.	"The idea that the Italian race has changed as the result of alien immigrations is myth.
"Gobineau was a Frenchman, Houston Chamberlain an Englishman, Woltman a Jew, Lapouge another Frenchman. Chamberlain actually declared that Rome was the capital of chaos.	"The Italians of today are for the most part descended from families established for at least 1,000 years and can thus be regarded as a pure race. The conception of racism in Italy ought to be essentially Italian with an Aryan-Nordic direction.
"No such doctrine will ever find wide acceptance here in Italy.	"The Jews are the one people settled in Italy who have not been assimilated; they have no racial affinity whatsoever with Italians."
"National pride has no need of the delirium of race (he continued). Anti-Semitism does not exist in Italy."

Franco Reply To Great Britain

Following are excerpts from Generalissimo Francisco Franco's reply to the British proposal for withdrawal of foreign soldiers from the Spanish civil war:

THE NATIONAL Government of Spain repeats its acceptance in principle of the withdrawal of foreign volunteers and as authentic evidence of the practical worth of said declaration, in its desire to offer the world obvious proof of its effective collaboration in the laudable efforts of the Nonintervention Committee, it is disposed from now to increase to 10,000 the number of foreigners to be withdrawn immediately . . .

The National Government of Spain also offers, as an extraordinary concession, to respect the establishment of two safety ports in the enemy zone, one in the Catalonian area and the other in the Levantine (lower Mediterranean) area, in order that vessels carrying foodstuffs may enter those ports and provided that sufficient guarantees of vigilance are forthcoming to prevent perversion of the aim pursued and that the ports in question, with selected zones, are at a distance from the scene of military operations. . . .

The National Government of Spain desires likewise to avail itself of this opportunity to offer its co-operation with the object of defining and limiting, so far as may be practicable, the conception of military objectives in relation to aerial bombardments and to regulate this difficult problem with the view of causing the least possible damage both to neutral nations and to the Spanish civilian population . . .

• • • •

THE NATIONAL Government, as already stated in its (note) of November 18, 1937, deems this grant (of belligerent rights) to be a right.

There exist to a full extent in national Spain, the conditions necessary to request that the above may be recognized:

(a) The possession of, and full sway over, a portion of national Spanish territory which greatly exceeds that held by the enemy.

(b) A legal and regular government which de facto exercises over said portion of territory the rights inherent in sovereignty.

(c) A regular land and air army, perfectly organized and subject to strict military discipline, which affords a guarantee of order and which is striving with undoubted success for the integrity of the country, respecting and causing to be respected, with the utmost scrupulousness, the laws and customs of warfare, and acting under the direction of a generalissimo on behalf of the nation and its government; and the existence of a navy which is conducted under the same conditions as the army and which controls territorial waters, both forces operating under a flag already recognized by many countries and respected eight years ago by the entire world without exception.

No requirement for the enjoyment of belligerent rights is, therefore, lacking and, nevertheless these are now afforded us to a diminished extent and on terms which render them wholly valueless. . . .

• • • •

THE PROPOSED proportional withdrawal of volunteers presents difficulties which emasculate and sterilize the proposal. For this reason, the Spanish National Government has been obliged to propose that practical formulas for effecting the withdrawal basis of proportional withdrawal referred to above is enumeration of the number of foreign volunteers in the service of each party to the conflict.

Without any fear of error, it is possible at this stage to affirm that the commissions charged with this duty will be unable to make the calculations entrusted to them unless the interested parties act in good faith. This is due to the following reasons:

(a) The way in which foreigners have been recruited for the enemy army, by which recruits, from the moment of their enlistment, have been given national names and passports and the fact that the opposing faction has had recourse to the juridical fiction of naturalizing such recruits as Spaniards.

(b) Their distribution, in the majority of cases, in different combatant units of the enemy force, in lieu of forming a homogeneous body.

(c) The lack, in the case of the hostile forces, of any distinguishing mark by which foreigners can be identified.

(d) Possibility of distributing them temporarily among the civilian population during the period in which the commission is engaged in the task of investigation, a distribution which in large cities such as Madrid, Barcelona and Valencia would render any effective investigation impossible.

(e) The fact that volunteers enlisted in the enemy army have been incorporated for preference in combatant units, which for that reason are stationed in most advanced positions. How could commissions of inspection, even if they were fully qualified to carry out their work, proceed to these places, as it is not possible to suspend hostilities for a single moment in order to perform these counting operations, or that foreigners should visit the battle fronts?

How would it be possible to avoid the foreign volunteers being overlooked, bearing in mind the possibility of incorporating them in medical services which without exception are excepted from measures contemplated for the remainder of the army? . . .

THE SPANISH National Government, faithful to what was stated in its above-mentioned note of November 18, 1937, expresses its agreement with all measures proposed with the view of establishment and strengthening of observation on Spanish land frontiers, and in its earnest desire to co-operate to the utmost in application of the plan, considers that proposed closing of frontiers should be permanent and without any condition which might limit it, and that vigilance on the frontiers should be strengthened in order to avoid infringements which have occurred in the past, notwithstanding agreements entered into and the observation service established thereon.

The case is otherwise as regards maritime observation, both as regards observation in ships and permanent inspection in ports.

There is authentic evidence to reveal its inadequacy, since many vessels have taken contraband of war to enemy ports, while carrying on board observers of the Nonintervention Committee.

Permanent commissions in ports would usurp in humiliating manner the sovereign rights of Spain and would give rise to the same dangers as those specified in the case of the supervision of observers supervising the evacuation of volunteers, all of which can be avoided by transferring the proposed vigilance service in our ports to ports of departure of ships, which are points at which there are good grounds for supposing that war material can be supplied.

But what undoubtedly would better solve this problem would be full recognition of the rights of belligerency to the contending parties who, as interested parties, would stop on their own behalf all contraband, and, without doubt, would act with zeal which nothing could surpass.

As regards air observations foreshadowed in paragraphs 170 to 174 of the plan, it is incompatible with the military situation through which Spain is passing and is consequently impracticable, since at the present time airports are entirely military in character and cannot be subjected to foreign observation. In the same manner, air observation by means of flights over National territory is unacceptable, since this would constitute permanent foreign watch on its defenses and on movement of its troops, and would lend itself to repeated incidents which might be invested with incalculable gravity . . .

• • • •

NATIONAL SPAIN is fighting for the defense of western civilization in an heroic and victorious war which already has lasted two years and, in spite of its great desire to service Europe, it cannot depart from the path which its obligations impose upon it, or emasculate the character of the conflict, when in its generosity it has offered practical and equitable methods to ward off dangers which it does not fail to recognize, it accepts willingly withdrawal of volunteers, subject to conditions indicated above which would render it practicable and which would reduce to a minimum the number and duties of foreign agents in Spain . . .

Nazis Arrest 110 Jews; Used Swimming Pool

Berlin, Aug. 22 (AP).—An announcement today that the police arrested 11 foreign and 99 German Jews Saturday in a raid on a swimming pool at Stoelpchen See, outside Berlin, indicated that the Nazi drive against Jews was continuing.

A communique said: "It became known to the police that numerous had chosen this place for their meetings, forcing the decent German population to avoid the pool."

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Kingston Speech.

Paris, Aug. 22.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S speech at Kingston is radically different from all other recent American statements about European affairs. Unlike the addresses of Secretary Hull, which have preceded it, the President's speech is not an exhortation to Europe. Unlike his own address in Chicago nearly a year ago, it is not an appeal to American public opinion on behalf of a course which the Administration would like to take.

The Kingston speech is not a sermon to the Europeans. It is not a new statement of Government policy dependent on the personal views of the President. It is not a commitment resting on an official declaration. It is a description of how the great majority of the American people are feeling, and a prediction of how they will feel and will eventually act as the issue of war or peace, of tyranny and freedom, of aggression and peaceable negotiation, grows more acute.

• • • •

THE IMPORTANCE of the speech does not lie, therefore, in any personal promise or any personal threat by Mr. Roosevelt. Informed Europeans know quite well that an American President cannot make personal commitments in foreign policy. They have not forgotten that in August, 1914, President Wilson exhorted the American people to remain neutral not only in their acts but in their feelings, and that they did not remain neutral. They have not forgotten that in 1919 President Wilson pleaded with the American people to underwrite the Versailles Treaty and that the American people refused. The Europeans know, therefore, how they must discount promises which express the personal views of a President.

The Kingston speech, however, since it is not a promise but a prophecy, raises only one question: Is Mr. Roosevelt's judgment correct when he predicts that American public opinion will render a decisive verdict in favor of nations that maintain free institutions and defend the peace? The only question is whether Mr. Roosevelt is a true interpreter of the real public opinion of the United States. Does he really know how the people are reacting and how they will react to the European crisis? For if he is correct in his report and in his prediction, then the weight of American influence and power is bound to be felt increasingly in Europe until the crisis is resolved. If he is right that Americans will not be indifferent, if he is right that their sympathies will be strong and passionate, then it is certain that their feelings will find practical expression, and that the United States is a material factor in the situation.

HE IS almost certainly right in stating that in a general war of aggression American public opinion would in the main be passionately against the aggressors. There can be no real doubt about that. And it is equally certain that these sentiments would cause the Government and the people to do all sorts of things to help the democratic coalition in Europe. And it can hardly be doubted that these measures would be denounced as unneutral by the aggressor states, and that their efforts to cut the communications between American and the democratic alliance would result in all manner of reprisals and provocative acts. As a result, American lives and American interests would be directly involved. These episodes would in their turn intensify American partisan feelings and lead to stronger measures of intervention.

This is the course of events, we may assume, that the President foresees, and it was an act of great prudence, an act of courage, but true caution, on his part, to place the facts before the people of Europe. The lesson of the Great War has in this respect at least been taken to heart; the authorities in Berlin have been told clearly and in advance what to expect. In 1916 they were misled about American pacifism and did not realize what would happen in 1917.

• • • •

THE KINGSTON speech has had a hostile reception in Berlin and in Rome. But if the authorities there will read it carefully, they will see that Mr. Roosevelt has not created a new situation that is unfavorable to them. He has merely called their attention o a situation which exists, "to a process" as he put it "which we certainly cannot change and probably ought not to change." He has reminded them that in making their calculations, they must not decide until they have judged the consequences of the fact that after the first shock of the first phase of a European war, the democratic allies would almost certainly be able to draw upon the resources of America.

In making their decisions, they must, therefore, weight this fact correctly. They must estimate the degree to which the probability of eventual American assistance would stiffen the initial resistance of the democratic nations. And they must estimate the consequences in a long war of the allied access to the resources of the whole Western Hemisphere.

IN THE KIND of world we are living in at this moment, the President's speech is a most practical and constructive contribution to the maintenance of peace, for peace depends for the present not on treaties or moral principles or peaceful sentiments, but on estimates as to the chances of winning a war. Whenever the chances are even or better, the chances of war are increased; whenever defeat seems certain, the chances of peace improve. This is the essential principle of European politics today, and whoever understands this principle has the key which explains the whole complicated and otherwise unintelligible business.

If the democratic and pacific nations are visibly and obviously stronger, they will not be attacked and they will not have to fight. As long as they can demonstrate clearly that they would win, that their armaments are at least equal, that their alliances are solid, that their morale is firm, and that their potential resources are superior, they can maintain the peace and keep open the possibility of negotiation. If they could prove conclusively that they would inevitably win a great war decisively, they would not only prevent a war but they would bring about the beginnings of a real negotiation.

• • • •

IT IS EVIDENT that the President is well informed about Europe and that he has grasped the inwardness of the problem of avoiding war. That is why, unlike almost all American speeches since 1919, the Kingston speech is an exact and practical action. For it promises nothing. But it predicts what is bound to happen.

The Once Over

Search For Another Tisket-Tasket.

Scene: Tinpan Alley.

Characters: Two song writers in a frenzied search for a number that will duplicate the success of the current "A tisket, a tasket, I lost my yellow basket" song.

• • • •

"I still can't figger out how it's going so big. It's just a nut number about somebody losing a yellow basket."

"You don't have to figger it out. All you gotta do is gimme a nussery rhyme."

"How about that number, 'Even when I'm shavin' my heart just won't stop ravin'?"

"What is a tisket anyhow?"

"I dunno."

"What's a tasket?"

"I don't think there is any such thing, but they put it in because they couldn't rhyme tisket with basket."

"They coulda left it in as tisket and had her lose her yellow biscuit."

• • • •

"How about Old Mother Hubbard?"

"I thought of that, but what could we do with it in the tisket-tasket style?"

"Sumpin like this . . . A hubbard, a cubbard, I lost my yellow . . . what's a rhyme for cubbard?"

"Nuthin. I been all through that. Can we get anything out of that one about Little Miss Muffet?"

"Lemme see . . . A tiffet, a tuffet, I can't locate Miss Muffet . . . Not bad, eh?"

"Maybe we got sumpin. A tiffet a tuffet, I can't locate Miss Muffet . . . I left her in the subway and I lost her in the jam."

"We gotta be whimsical and the subway ain't whimsical. In the nussery rhyme the girl was eating sumpin. What was she eatin'?"

"Spiders, wasn't it? . . . Beside her, a spider, I lost a jug of cider . . . How's that?"

"Terrible. I remember now what she was eatin' . . . she was eatin' curds of whey."

"What's curds of whey?"

"We can call up a delicatessen store and find out . . . No, wait a minute. Whatever a curd of whey is, it's out . . . We gotta have sumpin' like a basket."

"Stupid! Would this Tuffet dame be eating a basket?"

"If we made her that hungry we would have a great sympathy angle in the song. I got it! That Jack and Jill thing . . . A bucket, a bicket, it's moonlight in the thicket . . ."

"Wait! It's just come to me! From that one about Mary's Little Lamb . . . A tammy, a shammy, oh, where's my little lammie . . . And if I do not find it soon, that's why I love you-u-u-u."

"We got sumpin' now. But cut the tammy-shammy . . . It's too much like a steal. Make it like this . . . Lissen . . . A mutton, a button . . . What rhymes with button?"

"Button . . . A mutton, a button, the count has lost 'Babs' Hutton."

"It's no topical number. A mutton, a button, she lives at 14 Sutton . . . And if I had her telephone I'd be a happy man."

"Here's another. It keeps it in the Little Lamb vein . . . With sheepses, she sleepses, my iddle biddle Bo Peepses . . ."

(There is the crash of fist against chin. A body falls heavily to the floor. The survivor jumps out of the window. It is just as well.)

Price Control

By Mark Sullivan

"Raise Prices We Will."

AT Hyde Park over last week-end, President Roosevelt conferred with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. What they talked about is easy to guess. They, and the country face a condition for which the word "crisis" is not too strong. If the crisis fails to impress itself on the country as sensational, that is only because the condition has crept up gradually. It lacks the thunder-clap quality but essentially is no less startling.

Nearly five years ago, on October 22, 1933, President Roosevelt made the following declaration. He had been in office ten months and he was referring to various measures he had taken or was about to take, for the purpose of raising prices, especially prices of farm crops:

"I do not hesitate to say, in the simplest, clearest language of which I am capable, that, although the prices of many products of the farm have gone up . . . I am not satisfied either with the amount or the extent of the rise, and that it is definitely a part of our policy to increase the rise and to extend it . . . If we cannot do this one way we will do it another. Do it we will."

• • • •

FIVE YEARS, lacking two months, have gone by. Today, prices of some major farm crops are materially lower than they were when Mr. Roosevelt said that "raise them we will." In October, 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt made his declaration, wheat was 84 cents a bushel—today it is 64. In October, 1933, cotton was 9.16 cents a pound; today it is 8.25. In October, 1933, the index price of all grain crops was 78; today it is 77.

If anyone chooses to describe this condition as utter failure of the Administration's farm program, it is difficult to see how such a statement can be successfully controverted. Indeed the failure is broader; it is failure of the whole monetary program of the Administration for raising prices generally.

• • • •

MR. ROOSEVELT made his October, 1933, announcement that "raise prices we will" as an explanation of, and to justify, several steps he had taken, and was taking, to raise prices. The day before, he had announced a major one of these steps. He changed the price of gold from $20 an ounce to $35. To the end of making prices of commodities higher, he announced and followed a policy of buying gold at the new $35 price. (With the result that owners of gold throughout the world dumped it on America until our Government today owns more than half all the gold in the world.)

To the same end of raising prices he reduced the gold content of the dollar from roughly 26 grains to 15. That is, in terms of odd cents, he reduced the dollar from 100 cents to 59. To the same end of raising prices generally, the Administration raised the price of silver from the then 32 cents an ounce to 45 cents an ounce.

In addition to steps affecting gold and silver, other steps have been taken affecting money generally, especially the form of money called bank credit. The bank-credit form of money has been diluted, the milk has been watered—by the process of printing Government bonds and turning them over to banks, by which action they were transmuted into money.

• • • •

IN ADDITION to the many monetary steps designed to raise prices generally, Mr. Roosevelt has taken other direct steps specifically designed to raise prices of farm crops. He, through Secretary Wallace, has paid out Government money, and at the same time put compulsion upon farmers, to reduce the acreage of crops raised, to the end that prices should go up. They have loaned money on crops, in order to hold them off the market, and thus keep prices up. They have bought great quantities of cotton, wheat products, and some 20 other farm crops, to the end that prices should be kept up.

A failure of a farm and monetary program as broad as this constitutes a major economic condition. And a condition as striking as that which exists today cannot arrive and exist without being followed by consequent conditions equally striking. What the next development may be is hard to surmise. Possibly we might have light if we had a stenographic report of the week-end conversation between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wallace. But perhaps it will be nature and not Mr. Roosevelt, that will determine the next phase.

Slap In The Face

By Barnet Nover

Franco Answers London.

THE sharp rebuff which Neville Chamberlain has just received at the hands of Gen. Franco is neither unexpected nor undeserved. The British prime minister clearly had it coming to him. For weeks on end, in his relations with the insurgent generalissimo, he has been playing the titular role in "He Who Gets Slapped." In the matter of the repeated bombings of British ships he has, in fact, been Franco's most vigorous apologist in London.

To do Mr. Chamberlain full justice, his unheroic policy concerning Spain was forced upon him when, last February, he put all his diplomatic eggs in one basket. Then, at the time of his historic break with Anthony Eden, he decided that it was to England's and Europe's interest to negotiate an agreement with Italy and to do so without demanding that Italy give token of her good faith by beginning the withdrawal of her troops from Spain. As he told the House of Commons: I believe that if these negotiations are approached in a spirit of mutual confidence there is good hope that they may be brought to a successful conclusion but if you are going beforehand to enter upon them in a spirit of suspicion then none can save you."

• • • •

THE ANGLO-ITALIAN agreement was duly signed on April 16. It contained a settlement of many problems at issue between the two countries. But then and since, most recently in Mr. Chamberlain's speech on July 26, Great Britain has insisted that a settlement of the Spanish problem must be a prerequisite of the entering into force of the agreement.

Such a settlement seemed, last April, very near consummation. The war appeared about over and assured by Mussolini that Italy's troops would be withdrawn once the fighting ceased if not sooner. Mr. Chamberlain was not disturbed by the fact that the victory would be Franco's. Britain, it was believed, could deal with him in good time and to her own satisfaction. After the war he would need funds for reconstruction purposes. Neither Germany nor Italy could supply those funds; Great Britain could and would, provided he showed himself amenable to her wishes.

THE ANTICIPATED did not occur, however. The war in Spain continued. It survived Franco's victorious march to the sea; his drive on Valencia, the closing of the Spanish border by France on June 30, the continued bombardment of Spanish republican ports.

To bring the Anglo-Italian treaty into force, therefore, Mr. Chamberlain found it necessary to dig out of its pigeonhole the long slumbering plan for the withdrawal of foreign volunteers. After considerable effort that plan was finally approved by the 26 nations participating in the London Nonintervention Committee. It was an elaborate plan covering many pages. It went into great detail on the subject of how the commissions of inquiry were to be organized, how the counting of foreign soldiers on both sides would be made and how these volunteers would be evacuated after they had been counted. It also described the system of control that would be established after evacuation had been completed. The plan, for all its faults, bore on its every page evidence of the British genius for compromise.

• • • •

GEN. FRANCO has now informed the London government that he will have none of it. He insists on the recognition of his belligerency as a right not as a reward. He demands that the withdrawals be equal from both sides, and not proportional. He wants the proposed closing of the frontiers to be made permanent, but he objects to observers stationed in Spanish ports and at airdromes. In brief, he insists that the only kind of an agreement he will accept is one which he is to be permitted to write.

His position happens to be entirely understandable. France closed the Spanish border more than seven weeks ago. In that time the government forces have been unable to get arms by land and the supplies they have received via the sea have been subjected to the bombardment by Franco's planes. At the same time the strong suspicion exists that Italy has been sending more men and more supplies to Franco; so strong is that suspicion in fact that even the British government has begun to take it seriously.

But despite these advantages Franco today is making no headway and is beginning to suffer from a shortage of manpower, a fact borne out by the conscription decree ordering all youths of 18 to the colors. To be deprived of his foreign "volunteers" at this time, or even a part of them, might permanently injure his chances of victory.

IT IS DIFFICULT to believe that his message to London was sent without the advice and consent of Mussolini. The very wording of the note shows how much Franco depends on his foreign assistance to carry on the war. The conclusion to be drawn, therefore, is that Mussolini has decided either that the Anglo-Italian agreement must be written off or that a victory in Spain is more important than that agreement. A third alternative is that he still hopes to bluff Chamberlain into letting him have his way in Spain and the agreement, too. But that is unlikely.

After six months of personal diplomacy and three weeks after a most optimistic speech in the House of Commons declaring the international situation more hopeful than before, Mr. Chamberlain finds himself in a deep hole of his own digging. For while an about-face on the Spanish issue is indicated, such an about-face would be tantamount to a confession of failure. Moreover with the Central European situation as tense as it is, it has great risks. Better to temporize some more; to make believe that Franco's note makes further negotiation possible; better to do nothing than to do something. The habit of inaction may prove, in Chamberlain's case, hard to overcome.

It has been our observation that more homesickness exists among the Federal personnel here than, possibly, among any other group of similar proportions in the land. The sometimes sharp, sometimes dull, pain of nostalgia is suffered chiefly among those who came here from the American West. Hopeful of steady employment, they passed civil service examinations and landed in Washington to tussle with an Eastern city and to fix their eyes on spaces cramped, to say the least. So most of them stay here (unable to turn loose the jobs) and hunger for what they constantly call the "great and fine open spaces of the West."

We had an experience with it the other night. A gentleman in the General Accounting Office, who came here from California, was in such throes of the blues that we regretted our stock of rye had been so reduced over the week-end as not to be available for his consolation. He spoke of the West, as in a dream; of how the East cramped him unendurably at times; of how he had tried to get a transfer back West and failed repeatedly, and of how he flees periodically from Washington to any rural place where his elbows won't feel cramped.

Today, seizing upon the In-Com-Co, journal of the I. C. C. Club employes, we find a poem from the pen of Joan Root, who, a notation explains, came here from Portland, Oreg., to work in the Bureau of Motor Carriers. She sings:

"I have a need of Western mountain peaks,
"Rising full-timbered to the topless skies—
"For flow and sparkle of the mountain creeks,
"Where ripples fall and rise and fall and rise.
"I need the feel of rain upon my face,
"Fresh from the Western clouds, the pungent flowers,
"Rain-laden, and the secret, silent place
"Of fern and bladed grass and happy hours.
"I am harassed by hurry, nagged by noise
"Of city all about me, closing in . . .
"I crave a woodland and the quiet poise
"Of petaled blossom and of silver fin.
"I shall be happy, once again I roam
"The timbered hill-peaks of my Western home."

We don't know what to suggest to those nostalgic Westerners. They're certainly taking on something awful. That old Civil Service Commission is an old meanie, luring all those folks from paradise to weep on our shoulders here!

• • • •

The Federal Diary regrets that the note it recently carried on C. A. Hamilton contained two inaccuracies. The history of that note is this: Certain friends of Mr. Hamilton sent us the information, and in the absence of Mr. Hamilton from the city, we were unable to refer the facts to him. His friends were entirely well-meaning.

Exchange Clubs Would Designate 'American' Firms

Salt Lake City, Aug. 22 (AP).—The National Exchange Club opened its annual convention today with a sharp denunciation of Communism and Fascism.

Highlighting the opening session was a proposal of the ecommittee on citizenship that the various Exchange clubs—civic service luncheon groups—issue annually to approved business establishments signs stating:

"This concern is 100 per cent American—all employes are Americans and do not belong to any organizations which are openly or secretly doing those things which are not to the best interest of this country."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 22.

IN A HOMEY frame house on a quiet street over in deepest Brooklyn lives one of the most winning entertainers in America, and I mean dark, lovely Helen Morgan. The other day she celebrated her thirty-fourth birthday (her passport says she was born in Danville, Ill., in 1904) and we trooped over to wish her well and to grab her opinions on the state of the staggering world.

ALICE HUGHES.

I found, alas, that Helen is tired—tired of working at her trade, weary of warbling heartbreak for a big fee to millions of customers. She has just finished a happy engagement at the Riviera, on the Jersey side of the Hudson. She's even bored with the songs that have helped make her famous, "Love For Sale," "Body and Soul," and even the great "My Bill," from the immortal "Show Boat." But she's at heart a jolly soul, and she and her mother keep their big house filled with friends. She showed us all her presents, handed out on her birthday eve at the Riviera, when Ben Marden dimmed the lights, a glittering cake was carried in, and Enric Madriguera's boys played "Happy Birthday to You." Helen bawled, of course.

Right now she's ablaze with an idea. She and Ma Morgan have picked a 72-acre farm in Connecticut, where she'd like to sit and rock, and raise goats. She is mad about goats' milk cheese, a tidbit popular in Scandinavia, which tastes like a blend of peanut butter and maple sugar, and can sell at a nickel.

But I know Helen always will sing. The rich voice rolls out so freely and so beautifully. In the old days of the speakeasy, she used to sit at table with a party and sing for sheer joy of it. One day lunching with me at the Algonquin, she sang a new song hit, "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking," just to delight me. It did, and all the other munchers laid down their tools to listen. All right, Helen darling, raise your nanny-goats. But never hush that throaty, moving voice!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Well, we are all talking about young John Roosevelt going to work at that famous Boston store at $18 a week, which won't keep Anne Clark in lipstick. Of course, he'll move up fast if he has anything on the ball. I often ponder F. D. R.'s money problems, with all these big, young lads of his getting married simultaneously. The President is well off, but not a really rich man, and it must take a lot of doing to launch all these new homes at practically the same minute . . .

Hollywood Designer Sees Women Wearing Anything From 'Beer Mugs to Diving Suits'

Adrian Says That Era of Rugged Individualism Has Arrived.

New Freedom in Dress Is Termed Reaction to Dictators.

MEN who have been complaining the last few seasons about the craziness of women's styles—especially their hats—haven't seen anything yet. For if the prophecies of Adrian, famous Hollywood designer, come true women may soon appear on the streets wearing anything from "beer mug hats to diving bell suits."

It's all due to the fact the age of rugged individualism in feminine styles has arrived, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer fashion authority explained in an interview with the United Press.

"Anything Apt to Go.

"I feel," said Adrian, "that this rebellion in the world of fashion, this cry for individualism, has been brought about principally by the regimentation of thought in a world where there is so much political group thinking.

"Regardless of what caused it, almost anything is apt to go in the way of feminine dress so prepare yourself for the worst. From now on, just how well dressed a woman happens to be will depend entirely upon her own good taste and her ability to discriminate between good and bad."

As to hats—well here is what Adrian says:

"If you should walk down the street and suddenly see a chic woman peeking out from beneath what at first appears to be something Poker Annie shot at or a souvenir of the Texas Centennial, don't be amazed. It will be fashion. Every indication shows a distinct feeling for the fashions of the old West, mostly built on a diminutive scale."

"With feathers, too?" he was asked.

Sees Vivid Season.

"Don't worry about feathers," he replied. "I believe the recent trend to feathers will be completely dead within the next two months.

"I refuse to be quoted on the matter of skirt length," he went on. "It has always been my contention the length of the skirt should be entirely up to the woman. If she feels she has the prerequisites for wearing them short, let her do so. Otherwise, she is smarter and more chic in a conservative length.

"As to color, I feel that fall definitely will be an extremely vivid season, ranging from the most brilliant to the most subdued of tones. Black, of course, will lead.

"The star of metal cloth again is in the ascendency. Metal fabrics will be used for everything from trimming to complete frocks, a fact destined to be a bit hard on pocketbooks."

ALTHOUGH Adrian, Hollywood designer predicts women are going to wear wilder and wilder hats as the season progresses, this creation of his own, worn by Joan Crawford, seems fairly tame. It is of periwinkle blue crepe with a narrow beaded brim.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

The Old Home.

"Of course I like Washington, but I just can't get used to being cramped up in an apartment."

"Me either. We had such a big old place at home."

"So did we—one of those great big old houses, you know——"

"Yes, with high ceilings——"

"I know. And a big entrance hall——"

"Yes, and a great, wide staircase——"

"Yes, and we had a great big kitchen. Say—we could put this whole apartment I'm living in into our kitchen!"

"Say, our pantry alone was as big as my living room!"

"We must have had—well at least 12 rooms."

"I bet we had 15 or 16, counting the pantry and the summer kitchen and the attic——"

"Oh, well, we had alcoves that would make two of my bathroom."

"Yes, and we had these great big old porches——"

"So did we—with pillars! And our yard—say, I wish you could have seen our yard!"

"I wish you could have seen ours. Why, it must have been at least a mile to the road.

"I know. And we had a lot of big old locust trees——"

"So did we, and honeysuckle on the fence."

"Yes, and we had climbing roses . . . and ivy . . . "

"Our place had been in our family forever. That was why I hated to see it go so bad. And the house was chock full of wonderful old antiques and things."

"So was ours, but of course we had to sell 'em—when we came here."

"That was the way with us. We just couldn't be bothered."

"Well, that's civilization for you!"

"She is?"

"Yes—no, maybe its Illinois—well, I know she said they had a big old place out there somewhere."

"This new maid I've got is from Illinois."

"Is she any good?"

"I can't tell—yet. But I know one thing—she must come of a pretty good family. She said they had a big old place out in the Middle West."

Women Earn More at Home, Expert Asserts

Cash Saved by Housework Exceeds Business Woman's Pay.

DOES it pay a married woman to work outside the home? An emphatic "No" to this question is given by Mrs. Ralph Borsodi, of the School of Living, of Suffern, N. Y., in a paper prepared for discussion at one of the technical sessions of the Seventh International Management Congress to be held in Washington September 19 to 23.

The much discussed question, "Should women work?" is approached by Mrs. Borsodi from the dollars and cents viewpoint. In her paper, just released, she sets out to prove that modern household equipment and home management methods enable the wife who stays home to gain economically over the one who works in office or factory.

Mome Work Pays.

Mrs. Borsodi's views are based on extensive reasearch carried on at the School of Living, in addition to 18 years of personal family records on the costs of producing food, clothing and shelter by the members of her own family within their home.

Refuting the prevailing notion that goods and services produced in the home for home consumption have no measurable economic value, Mrs. Borsodi points out that, with full allowances made for the costs of raw materials, fuel, overhead and capital investment, an earnings value can be placed on even so humdrum a task as the weekly wash.

Income Itemized.

In a typical family of 4.5 persons with an income of $2,100, a woman doing her own laundry at home earns about $245.55 a year, according to Mrs. Borsodi. Moreover, if she uses modern household equipment, she can cut the time involved from 264 hours a year to 234, with a resultant "pay" increase from 68 cents to $1.05 an hour.

Similarly, if the average woman did all her cooking and baking, she would earn the equivalent of $6 a week, or $312 a year. Add to this what she could earn in her sewing room and in a flower and kitchen garden and the sum, according to Mrs. Borsodi, would show that she can earn far more than the average woman who has abandoned home work in order to earn cash, and whose most frequent annual gross income, even before deductions for carfares, lunches, extra clothes and other "business upkeep" expenses, is probably less than $600.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

"Am I Wrong?" Asks Father Who Disapproves of Daughters, 15 and 16, Staying Out Late With Boys.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have two daughters, aged 15 and 16, and they have boy friends who come to the house and, at times, take them out. As I come home late in the evenings from work, I find that they are out with these boys, and that they come home around midnight. My wife is too lenient with them and does not seem to realize they are at a dangerous age. She lets them do what they want and go where they want.

• • • •

I, as a father, feel that it is not right to give them so much freedom, and try to correct them and tell them they are too young to go out with boys and stay out late hours. But they think I am terrible, that I am old-fashioned, and that I am not letting them have any fun. Am I wrong? Very truly yours, WORRIED FATHER.

• • • •

DEAR WORRIED FATHER: I have observed that fathers, as a rule, are inclined to be much more strict with adolescent daughters than mothers are. Perhaps it is because they remember what gay dogs they were in youth, and the predatory designs they had on various and sundry young maidens whom they squired. Mothers, on the other hand, either because of a certain sheltered innocence, or because they don't want their daughters to become wallflowers or old maids, are willing to give them a bit more leeway.

• • • •

When a father is too strict, you usually find the mother being too lenient, as a gesture of attempted compensation, as a means of balancing the situation. And to that extent you may be to blame if your daughters are being given more freedom of action than is wise, or suitable to their years. Where full responsibility for policing young daughters and keeping them in line is intrusted to the mother, she is apt to do a much more effective job than when she is constantly required to defend them against the wrath and suspicion of a beetle-browed father.

• • • •

Frankly, I think a girl of 15 is too young to stay out until midnight except on rare and special occasions. According to modern social usage, a girl of 16 is allowed beaux and a certain amount of night life—that is to say, dancing, theater, movies, etc., one or two nights a week, providing she goes with young persons who are known to and approved by her family. In this case, however, the fact that your daughters are so nearly of an age might argue in favor of extending the same privileges to both. I should say their best safeguard is the chaperonage which they provide each other by going out together.

• • • •

The best protection you can afford your daughters is to get together with their mother, in secret conclave, and work out a united-front policy which she is entrusted to enforce. Make it a point to know their young friends really well, to make them cordially welcome to your home, to see that the greater part of their social life is centered under that roof, and to grant them certain "nights out" privileges of a well-defined sort—say, one or two nights a week, to be out not later than 11:30 o'clock, in company and at places which you can approve. M. H.

• • • •

Is Kissing Unmoral?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 21 years old and have been dating for approximately seven years. Until fairly recently I had practised a "touch-me-not" program so strict that I have been variously labeled and known among my friends as, "the human icicle," "the neuter gender," "chilly Catherine," etc. This was partially due to natural disinclination and partially to a very strict and servere moral program which I devised for myself at a tender age.

• • • •

Recently and gradually I have experienced what I know to be very natural and human desires, and more than once have been tempted to take advantage of the comfort and pleasure afforded by a man's lips and arms. So far I have met this situation by accepting and returning the goodnight kisses of a very well selected few. That is—delaying the almost inevitable situation by substitution, distraction and avoidance, not to mention considerable self-control on my part, until a very few minutes before curfew, and then letting things take their course, safe in the knowledge that there will not be sufficient time for the situation to get out of control.

• • • •

I realize that in doing this I am violating the moral code I once thought perfect, and I thought I had better get your opinion on the subject. Do you think I am cheapening myself and cheating the husband I hope to have some day—to whom I wish to come comparatively clean, and of whom, incidentally, I shall expect and require no such record? Seriously, Miss Haworth, do you think that he or I will ever regret a few minutes of pleasure I experienced (and gave, I guess) with and to a very few men who really meant a lot to me?

• • • •

I want to do the thing that is right, and although it seems harmless enough I know that I am letting myself be guided by my emotions, and so I'm not quite sure. Will you help me by saying just what you think? Sincerely, MELISANDE.

• • • •

Steering Safe Course.

DEAR MELISANDE: So long as you confine your affectional exchange with the opposite sex to an occasional genuinely (and mutually) affectionate good night kiss, granted only to "a very few well selected men (friends), who really mean a lot" to you, you are committing no sin against the spirit and doing nothing of which you need feel ashamed.

• • • •

However, I think it may truthfully be said that the girl of really fastidious instincts is seldom, if ever, on what we might call kissing terms with more than one man at a time. Usually, out of her list of admirers, she elects one man to be her best friend and special favorite, and when she has found that his interest in her is something to bank on, she sets the seal on their friendship by granting him a kiss now and again.

• • • •

The girl who is on kissing terms with three or four or half a dozen (or more) fair-weather suitors at one and the same time is running the risk of having her favors evaluated very lightly; even of having her suitors compare notes on her largess behind her back. And to guard against this humiliating possibility it is altogether necessary that she bring her self-control into play, checking any tendency on her part or her suitor's part to practice lovemaking as a social pastime.

• • • •

Another danger inherent in easy kissability is this—kissing, like everything else, loses its flavor when over-indulged in; whereupon the feeling it is designed to express, or the sense it is supposed to satisfy, sets up a clamour for other expression or gratification. The girl who sets no very high price on her kisses is apt soon to find that her whole standard of values is slipping down the scale accordingly; that she is giving, and being called upon by her suitors to give, more of herself, for less in return, than is concomitant with either sound morality, social acceptability, good sense or clean self-respect. M. H.

New Epidemic Of Yellow Fever Is a Possibility

May Be Spread by Airplane Traffic to Tropics, Says Doctor.

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

WE WERE all startled a few months ago when Dr. Victor Heiser wrote in a popular magazine that we might be on the verge of a new epidemic of yellow fever. We had thought that this was a public health problem that was completely settled. Simply do away with a certain kind of mosquito and the danger is ended. But Dr. Heiser points out that yellow fever may be carried by other things than the mosquito.

One of the arresting things about the idea is that yellow fever may be carried to the United States from the jungles of South America by airplane traffic.

In South America the principal ports do not have yellow fever at present. Brazil is an example of a country where extra efforts are being made to keep the seaports free of all forms of mosquitoes.

Considering the preventive problem as a whole, an airplane might conceivably carry into the United States (1) mosquitoes infected with yellow fever; (2) new species of mosquitoes that might become acclimated here and later become infected by an imported human case, serving as a new and efficient vector for the spread of yellow fever in this country; (3) human cases of yellow fever; (4) human cases infected with yellow fever but arriving here during the incubation period; (5) infected animals.

On the assumption that yellow fever is most likely to be introduced into the United States by airplanes, the one great protective measure that can be applied is to make all of our Southern ports of arrival free of the Aedes aegypti.

In such an Aedes-free port, granted that an infected mosquito were landed and that it bit and infected one or more persons who subsequently developed yellow fever, there would be no mosquito vector to pass on the virus to other individuals and thus start an epidemic. Fumigation of arriving airplanes to prevent introduction of infected mosquitoes is the measure of choice.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

FOR THE first time in my life I have been a judge in a beauty contest, and now I can tell you what it takes to be chosen "Miss Venus. 1938."

That was the title bestowed on the pulchritudinous Alicia Winston at the annual Modern Vinus contest held recently at Steeplechase Park at Coney Island. The other 74 contestants are probably wondering just exactly what Miss Winston has that they don't have . . . and the average woman always wants to know what it is that makes another woman stand out in any crowd.

The winner has beauty. So have a number of the other contestants and they stayed right with her up to the final decision, but when it came to a showdown the vote was unanimously in favor of Miss Winston. Why? Her figure, of course, is perfect: Weight, 113 pounds for a height of 5 feet 3 inches; bust, 34½ inches; waist, 25½ inches; hips, 35 inches.

Few Knew How.

But the thing that really helped her to walk away with the title was her posture. She walked gracefully and naturally and that showed her lovely figure to advantage. There was none of that posing with hand on hip. Nor did she affect a stagey slink. Miss Winston held herself erect and walked beautifully, with not the slightest suggestion of stiffness.

Very few of the contestants knew how to walk or to stand, and those with obviously poor postures—about 40 in all—eliminated themselves on the first balloting. Instead of standing tall and erect, most of the 40 made the mistake of trying to improve their postures for the occasion by sticking their chests out. This threw their figures entirely out of line, and earned for one young lady the unofficial title among the judges of "Miss Chesty."

Good posture and a graceful walk must be natural. They are not to be put on for special appearances, and they are always important personality and beauty factors. This particular contest has been held annually for the past 25 years, and types of beauty change but these two qualifications always have been and always will be important.

Heavy Makeup Disproved.

As an interesting sidelight, Jay Dowden, who arranged the contest, says the old records show the beauty title aspirants used to be the petite type, then they were all large girls, and that now the small girls predominate. Also, this year's winner is a brunette!

Posture, not posing makes the figure.

Most Entries Eliminated Themselves With Poor Posture.

The other judges were men and they certainly expressed their disapproval of heavy makeup. The girls who wore too much rouge and lipstick were eliminated long before the final lineup. The select group had fresh pretty faces, looked superbly healthy and had good postures.

Miss Winston has an unusual program and, I think, it helps to explain her natural poise and perfect measurements. She is a dancer by profession, plays tennis every week, rides horseback and swims, and that's the kind of routine that builds beauty.

Pendleton Hogan's Coming Novel Is Dedicated to Mrs. Vandenberg

By Hope Ridings Miller.

The Post Society Editor.

From Michigan comes word that one of Washington's most dynamic and delightful official hostesses, Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, who has quite a flair for writing, is to be honored by a Capital novelist whose third book will be published this fall. Come October, and Pendleton Hogan's newest novel, "Mortal, Be Proud" will come from the press—dedicated "To Hazel Whitaker Vandenberg, with gratitude."

Mr. Hogan returned yesterday morning from Lakewood Farm on Lake Michigan, where he has been the guest of Senator and Mrs. Vandenberg for the past 10 days. "Mortal, Be Proud" was finished "about five minutes before I left for Michigan," he told me yesterday. For a couple of weeks now his evenings will be taken up in going over galley proofs and winding up final arrangements for his book. Unlike his first two novels, this one has a modern setting, and although it has no political implications, an important sequence is laid in Washington. Described by the publisher as "a novel of social manners," the plot gets under way in two old houses on an elm-arched street in Washington. From there it moves to a farm near a village called Middleton, Va. ("a combination of three towns—Middleburg, Luray and Salem—that I know extremely well," observed Pendleton Hogan yesterday). The climax is woven into still another setting, the Villa D'Asti on the Italian Riviera.

* * *

The novel is dedicated to Mrs. Vandenberg because she has been interested in the author's career for several years. Back in the days—and they weren't so long ago—when he was attending George Washington University and writing short stories in his spare time, she saw some of his work, thought it had exceptional promise and told him so at a time when he was greatly in need of encouragement. As his career progressed through publication of "The Bishop of Havana" and "The Dark Comes Early," his first two books, she continued to be one of his most enthusiastic boosters.

His contact with Mrs. Vandenberg came through his friendship with Arthur H. Vandenberg, jr., and the former Miss Elizabeth Vandenberg (now Mrs. Edward Pfeiffer). Having a background of experience as a writer and a keen appreciation of literary ability, Mrs. Vandenberg realized when she saw some of his first short stories that this talented young man was going places. Since then she has watched his work with increasing interest.

Incidentally, she and other members of the Vandenberg family have invited him, repeatedly, to visit them at their summer cottage, Shoreview, which they have occupied for the past 12 years. This is the first time Mr. Hogan has managed to arrange a trip to Michigan, however, since most of his vacations for the past few years have been devoted to writing.

The Vandenberg summer place is located on Lakewood Farm, the estate of the late George F. Getz, of Chicago, who devoted much time to creating an ideal vacation resort for himself and his friends. Senator Vandenberg commutes to Grand Rapids every morning to attend to business, but afternoon finds him back at Shoreview—swimming, sun-bathing, reading or writing. Mrs. Vandenberg enjoys croquet and swimming as her chief recreational activities, but she also finds plenty of time to read and entertain the shoals of guests that converge on Shoreview each summer.

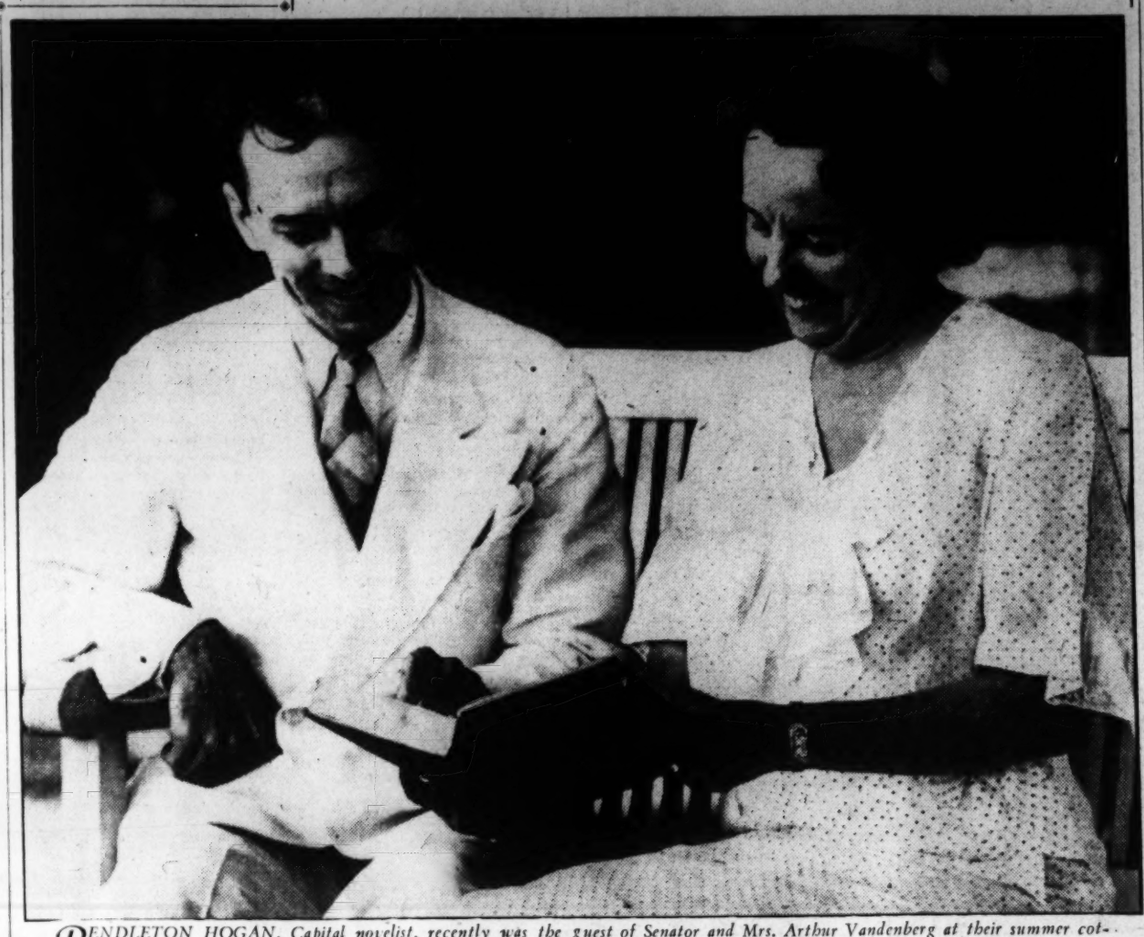
* * *

Among recent guests of the Vandenbergs, in addition to Pendleton Hogan, was James Parks, of Margate, N. J., who spends much time in Washington and will be back in the late fall to enjoy most of the winter here. Senator Vandenberg's daughter, Mrs. Vandenberg Knight, and her small son, Johnnie, have been frequent visitors at Shoreview this summer, and Mr. and Mrs. Pfeiffer arrived from New York by motor a couple of weeks ago to be guests there.

Earlier this summer, the Bulgarian Minister and Mme. Dimitri Naoumoff stopped over for a brief stay at Shoreview before continuing their motor journey on to the West Coast.

Senator and Mrs. Vandenberg plan to keep their place open through next month and most of the next, and to return to Washington the middle of November. A popular addition to Capital society for a number of years, Mrs. Vandenberg last winter increased her activity by becoming a columnist, turning out an article on "Your Capital City and Mine" for the National Historical Magazine.

Author Chats With Hostess to Whom His Next Book Is Dedicated



PENDLETON HOGAN, Capital novelist, recently was the guest of Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg at their summer cottage on Lake Michigan. He and his hostess (above) discuss one of his books, "The Dark Comes Early," when a roving cameraman got the shot above. Mr. Hogan's forthcoming novel, "Mortal, Be Proud," is dedicated to Mrs. Vandenberg.

Ladies Auxiliary to Rural Letter Carriers Group Will Plant Tree in Honor of Husbands Today

Soil From Every State and Main Rivers' Water to Be Used.

Mrs. H. G. Courtney, of Norwalk, Iowa, Will Preside.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, who open their convention at the Mayflower Wednesday, will pay tribute to their husbands today in a tree-planting ceremony at 4:30 p. m. on the Washington Monument grounds. Soil from every State in the Union will be placed at the base of a hickory tree to be planted in honor of the rural letter carriers—active, retired and deceased. Mrs. H. G. Courtney, of Norwalk, Iowa, the president, will officiate.

State delegates-at-large to the auxiliary convention have brought soil and members of the sesquicentennial and memorial statue committees will pour, at the roots of the tree, water which has been sent from the Pacific and Atlantic oceans, the Gulf of Mexico and the principal rivers of the country.

The ceremony, which will be one of the high points of the convention, will follow the joint session of the carriers' association, the auxiliary and the National Rural Letter Carriers' Juniors, which is the official opening of the general conclave at 8 a. m. today in Constitution Hall.

The auxiliary sessions begin tomorrow at 1:30 p. m. and will be held in the Presidential Dining Room of the Mayflower. Representative Virginia Jenckes, of Indiana, will address the opening meeting.

The juniors start registration at 8:30 this morning in the Garden Room of the Mayflower and will go sight-seeing this afternoon before the tree-planting. Last evening both they and the auxiliary joined association members in a reception and dance in the ballroom of the hotel.

Tomorrow afternoon an address by Walter Johnson and a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will comprise the juniors' program. Lloyd Hepner, jr., is president of the junior group and will come from his home in Woodstock, Va., to preside.

Mrs. Marie Mutchmore, of Beatrice, Nebr., accompanied by her young daughter, is here as official sponsor of the juniors. She is the widow of a rural letter carrier and the daughter of a former postmaster.

"Mother Newman" Here From West

Mrs. Welch Newman, of Rivera, Calif., chairman of the national executive committee of the auxiliary, and Mr. Newman, who has been a carrier for 16 years, drove to Washington, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Viola Newman.

The latter has come to be known to the rural carriers and their wives as "Mother Newman," for she has been attending conventions since 1931.

The lobby of the Mayflower, headquarters for the carriers and their wives and families, has the homely, friendly air of the hometown postoffice. Men in shirtsleeves and suspenders shake hands with each other or wave and call "hello" down the marble corridor. Children, who are usually comparatively few about the lobby there or in other hotels of the Capital, now play in well-behaved groups.

The auxiliary ranks second only to that of the American Legion, in membership.

Tonight there will also be the banquet of the State presidents' and secretaries' club, of which Mrs. James E. Vaughn, of Hemple, Mo., is president. This will be at Wesley Hall, with 150 attending.

Claude Babcock and Mrs. Penn Howard have returned from Grand Rapids, Mich., where they attended the eighteenth annual convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, just closed. Md. Federation Of Republican Women Meet Vote to Affiliate With National Group and Pick Two Delegates.

The Maryland Federation of Women's Republican Clubs yesterday voted to affiliate with the national federation. It also elected Mrs. Edna Payne of Annapolis, Maryland State chairman, and Mrs. Charles Wesley Lewis, of Baltimore, as delegates to the national convention in Chicago, Sept. 23.

The action was taken at a meeting for which Mrs. George B. Merrick, wife of Judge Merrick of the police court of Prince Georges County, opened her home in Upper Marlboro. The Maryland federation comprises about 70 units and holds four regular meetings a year. Yesterday's was the first in two years at which the Prince Georges County organization has been hostess.

Miss Marion E. Martin, in charge of women's activities for the Republican National Committee, addressed the group, explaining the purpose of the national federation and discussing the value of women's work to the party.

Until recently, she said, women have received comparatively little recognition in politics, although they have given much valuable service. When they first obtained the franchise, if a woman was to run for office, she was selected by the men in the party and was often not the person whom the women would have chosen for the place.

Women want to pick those of their own number to represent them, she pointed out. The woman's fight is first for women and second for her party, Miss Martin said. She told of Republican women in Wyoming now asking that there be as many women as men candidates on the party ticket in the next election. She was introduced by Mrs. Payne.

It was announced that two new clubs had been formed this summer, in Frederick and in Pikeville, Baltimore County.

Judge Merrick joined Mrs. Merrick in greeting the guests following the business meeting. Refreshments were served with Mrs. Frank Small, Mrs. Carlton Van Wagoner, Mrs. William H. Brooks, Mrs. Richard Zantzinger and Mrs. John Littlepage assisting at the punch table.

Another Republican gathering in that section this week will be the straw ride planned by the Young Republican Club of Prince Georges County, of which Donald E. Pitts is president. This will be held Friday night and the party will go to Beverly Beach, where the Pitts have a summer home.

Officers of the State federation include in addition to Mrs. Payne, Mrs. George McCreary, of Baltimore, vice chairman; Mrs. H. Edna Pitts, recording secretary; Mrs. W. David Tilghman, jr., of Elkridge, treasurer; Mrs. Maud D. Webb, of Towson, chairman of education; Mrs. Frankie Wilson, of Anne Arundel County, chairman of legislation and a candidate for the State legislature; Mrs. John D'Unger, of Baltimore, acting corresponding secretary and chairman of organization; Mrs. Almira Sweeten, Howard County chairman; Mrs. Francis Burgess, Baltimore, sergeant-at-arms; Mrs. William Chase, of Princes Georges County, former State chairman; Mrs. Lulu Powell, of Baltimore, past State chairman.

Among others present were Mrs. Annette Fisher, of Seat Pleasant, chairman of Prince Georges County; Mrs. W. A. Middleton, of Cottage City; Mrs. Charles Marbury, of Upper Marlboro; Mrs. Walter Quenstedt, of Jessup, and Mrs. Laura Girdwood, of Baltimore, a ward chairman.

Job's Daughters Dance At Welcoming Banquet

Commissioner Hazen to Greet Girls at Convention's Opening Today; Pageant on Program for This Evening, Beauty Contest for Tomorrow.

Nearly 1,000 members of Job's Daughters and their friends last night attended the banquet and dance at the Wardman Park Hotel which preceded the formal opening of the eighteenth annual session of the supreme guardian council of the order this morning.

Harry J. Schmidt, grand patron of the District of Columbia, O. E. S., and past associate supreme guardian of Job's Daughters, acted as toastmaster. Mrs. Ethel T. Wead Mick, founder of the order; Mrs. Elizabeth L. Warden, supreme guardian, and Mrs. Mary E. Teachum, founder of the organization in the District, were among the guests of honor. Others were Mrs. Helen D. Robbins, grand matron of the Eastern Star for the District of Columbia; Mrs. Minnie E. Keyes, grand secretary of the grand chapter O. E. S.; Flora E. Campbell, grand treasurer; Grace L. Catterfield, grand matron of the Michigan grand chapter, and Genevieve M. Nauman, grand secretary of Michigan.

The supreme guardian council is composed of members of the Masonic fraternity and the Order of the Eastern Star, who sponsor Job's Daughters, a sister organization to the DeMolay, comprised of daughters of members of the sponsoring bodies. The young girls of Job's Daughters as well as members of the guardian council are here for the convention.

William J. Dunham General Chairman

Registration continued all day, with groups coming in from every section of the country, William J. Dunham, as general chairman of the convention, and Louis Carl, supreme outer guard, andvice chairman, have been working for months in preparation for the conclave and were busy yesterday with details preliminary to the opening session.

An initiaton service was conducted by officers of Bethel 1 of Washington yesterday afternoon for a group of candidates both from within the District and outside. The girls were: Emily Spire, of Hyattsville, Md.; Helen Hartley, of Washington; Elsie Mae Harper, Washington; Lois Lawrenson, Washington; Althea Gillma, Alexandria, Va.; Patricia McIntire, Council Bluffs, Iowa; JJulia Rosner and Ruth Pope, Washington.

This morning's session opens at 9 o'clock. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen will welcome the delegates and there will be welcomes from L. P. Stuart, grand master of the Masonic Order of the District, and Mrs. Robbins as grand matron of the Eastern Star. Edward H. Way, of Boise, Idaho, will respond to the greetings from Commissioner Hazen and the other responses will be made by Edward C. Schauer, associate supreme guardian, of Wisconsin, and Mrs. Campbell, of the Eastern Star.

The address of the afternoon will be on the subject of "Courage," by Mrs. Mick. Music for the convention is in charge of Ada L. Bryan, of Illinois, supreme director of music, who is on both the morning and afternoon programs as soloist. The Gabriel sisters, of Berwyn, Ill., are scheduled to sing at the morning session.

Pageant and Drills Tonight

Jean Stowe, of Saskatchewan, Canada, representing Great Britain in the "all-states" pageant at the Wardman Park Theater tonight, is one of the young delegates here for the meeting. She is a slight, vivacious girl, with wavy brown hair and not enough of an accent to identify her as a Canadian neighbor.

Miss Ruth Ivers, who has been in charge of publicity and assisting Mrs. Laura Wallace in the direction of the pageant, is one of the busiest persons on the local convention committee. The members of Job's Daughters from nearby Maryland and Virginia and the District have been rehearsing for weeks in preparation for the spectacle and were joined in rehearsals over the week-end by the incoming representatives of other sections.

Bedtime Stories

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Spike Puts It Over.

Keep in mind this simple test:
Knowledge you can use is best.
—Young Spike.

This is a very general rule with the people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. They cannot afford to have their heads cluttered up with a lot of knowlege that is of no use to them and never can be. Life is too uncertain for that. So they are practical and confine themselves to learning those things that sooner or later they may be able to use.

Spike, the young son of Lightfoot the Deer, was sulking a little way up the road from the small clearing around Farmer Brown's sugar house among the maples in the Green Forest. He was sulking because an old doe had driven him away from a big stump on and around which salt had been placed by the Old Naturalist who was living in the sugar house this summer. The old doe had been the first to find it and she regarded it as solely hers by right of discovery. So this afternoon when she found Spike there before her she had angrily driven him away and had repeated this each time he had tried to steal back. Spike sulked and tried to think of some plan to get even with her and at the same time get at least a few licks of that salt.

Now it happened that this was the very afternoon that Tommy, Sue and Sammy had come over to visit the Old Naturalist and from the sugar house they had witnessed the whole performance. They had seen Spike when he discovered that salted stump and they had seen the old doe when she had driven him out of sight up the old road. They had watched him twice steal back only to be driven off.

"A regular pig," declared Sammy.

"We might go out and drive her away," suggested Tommy.

"What," said the Old Naturalist, "I have an idea that young Spike hasn't given up yet. He is a smart young buck and it won't surprise me at all if he has another try at that salt. Look! There he comes now on the jump!"

Sure enough Spike was coming down the old road running as only a badly frightened Deer does run. The Old Naturalist chuckled. "There's no grass growing under his feet," said he.

"What do you suppose has scared him so?" whispered Sammy.

"There goes the old doe" exclaimed Tommy. "She heard him coming and she isn't waiting to find out what the danger may be."

It was so. Heer white flag up, she bounded off and disappeared. At once Spike slowed to a walk. He walked over to the old stump and began licking salt. Every few seconds he would raise his head to listen and to look toward the woods where the old doe had disappeared. By and by she came cautiously stealing back. It was clear that she was looking for the cause of her fright and see if the way was now clear. Of course she saw the young buck there by the stump.

Instantly she forgot everything else. She dashed out. Rearing, she struck at him with her sharp hoofs. But he was watching and ready. He jumped and started back up the old road. The old doe chased him just a little way and then returned to the old stump and resumed feeding around it.

For a time all was quiet. Spike was out of sight up the road. Finally, the doe's back was turned squarely to the point where the road entered the woods. There was crash in the brush back of her and again the sound of a running Deer. Away went the old doe as before and again Spike enjoyed a few licks of salt and began to feed around the old stump. The old doe returned a little sooner this time and again Spike was forced to take to his heels.

For a third time Spike "put over" this smart trick. Then the old doe "got wise," as Sammy expressed it. After that she didn't give Spike a chance to try it again, and he finally gave up and departed.

"That," said the Old Naturalist, "was what I call a splendid example of applied knowledge. Yet some folks declare that animals do not think. I sometimes wonder if they themselves really think.

HenleinRevises Nazi Demands For Negotiation

Sudeten Aims Made More Specific; Delays in Parley Indicated.

Special Cable to The Post.

Prague, Aug. 22.—Konrad Henlein summoned his leading lieutenants to a meeting at Marienbad this afternoon, and outlined to them a program of new demands which his Nazi Sudeten German party will place before the Czech government.

Essentially they are the same as the party's original demands, but more specific and more suitable for negotiation

The meeting was held in a hotel suite last occupied by the late King Edward VII in 1909. When the Nazi leaders arrived, accompanied by gray-uniformed party guards, the aging hotel proprietor broke a rule enforced for 29 years. The doors of the royal suite were thrown open; dust was wiped from tables and chairs; windows were thrown open and sunlight poured in on rooms that the British monarch had used for the first time in 1903 and for the last time in 1909.

Henlein for Franz Joseph.

It was the hotel's King Edward VII room, sometimes shown to favorite guests, but never occupied by any of them. Only one change was made. A picture of the last Austro-Hungarian emperor, Franz Josef, was taken from the wall, and Henlein's photograph was hung in its place. The Nazi leader sat at the former King's desk.

Most of the leading Sudeten Germans were there, among them Prince Max Hohenlohe, one of the richest members of the party, who carries a Lichtenstein passport. The meeting lasted all afternoon and part of the evening. No statement was issued at the close, but it was said the party clarified its demands along lines suggested by Lord Runciman, British mediator between the government and its German minority.

During the afternoon session, a crowd of 4,000 men and women gathered in Goethe Square, outside the hotel.

Prague Quiet.

While the meeting was going on everything was quiet in Prague. It was rumored that toward the end of the week Lord Runciman would review the entire situation, but this was considered unlikely, at least until after he had had time to study the results of today's meeting and the new proposals which the government will make.

At the present no negotiations are going on. Events of last week demonstrated that the opposing views were too far apart, and that both would have to be clarified before a basis for negotiations could be found.

The feeling is growing that nothing much can be accomplished here before the National Socialist Party Congress convenes in Nuremberg, Germany, September 6. Henlein will go to Stuttgart towards the end of the week, and Ernst Kundt, the chief negotiator, will head for Stockholm to attend an international minorities conference.

Greater Concessions Hinted.

Over the week-end, it was indicated that Czechoslovakia was prepared to make greater concessions than had originally been expected. This was intimated in a front-page editorial published in the Prager-Presse, official foreign office newspaper. As if to prepare the Czech people for a greater sacrifice than they had anticipated, the newspaper wrote: "The settlement must be radical and serious as far Czechs are concerned."

The editorial explained negotiations were going through a critical period.

"We are entering a period," it said, "when all energy must be concentrated on finding a compromise."

The editorial indicated that if concessions were made immediately, they might assure the state against aggresson.

"Such a preliminary would be the best protection against any threat of international strength, and the best defense against an attack on the sovereignty of our integrity of the state." The newspaper ended by predicting Lord Runciman would show a sign of real initiative towards the end of the week.

Japanese Send Soviet 2 Protests On Planes, Consuls

Tokyo, Aug. 22 (AP).—Two strong Japanese protests to Moscow indicated today there had been only slight improvement in Russo-Japanese relations since the August 11 truce ended hostilities on the Siberian-Manchukuo frontier.

The foreign office disclosed the protests were made against Soviet plane flights over the disputed border and against Russia's "unreasonable attitude" in "forcing" withdrawal of Japanese consulate officials from Khabarovsk and Blagoveschensk.

Reports to Tokyo newspapers that Russia has increased military aid to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek and was actively assisting and directing the Chinese defense against the Japanese drive on Hankow, China's provisional capital, likewise contributed to continuing tension between the two governments.

HELP KIDNEYS PASS 3 LBS. A DAY

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Society Doctor Held in Attempt to Mutilate Younger Rival for Attentions to Coed Wife

Ex-Coast Guard Beaten, Slashed on 'Ride;' 2 Held as Aides.

By the United Press.

Olympia, Wash., Aug. 22.—Three men, including socially prominent Dr. K. W. Berry, 50-year-old physician, were under arrest tonight in the kidnaping of Irving Baker, former coast guardsman, who was beaten when an attempt was made to mutilate him because of supposed attentions he paid Dr. Berry's pretty young wife.

The third man arrested was William Macaloon, a former town marshal. Earlier Dr. Berry and a taxicab driver were held on charges of kidnaping—a capital offense in Washington.

Under Bond.

Dr. Berry was placed under $10,000 bond after he admitted having an altercation with Baker, but denied any part in the kidnaping.

Mcaloon was not immediately charged, but it was believed that similar charges would be filed against him.

Baker, 37, a former United States Coast Guard service officer and now an automobile dealer, was not injured permanently in the attack, which occurred Friday night. Pliers were used in the attempted mutilation, according to officers.

Motive for the attack was said to be the doctor's jealousy over Baker's attention to his wife, Elizabeth, 27, a former University of Washington co-ed, at a party last July 4.

Baker was found wandering, badly injured and in a daze, on the outskirts of Olympia Friday night.

He said four men had come to his home, had shown him a warrant for his arrest, and had taken him to a gravel pit outside the town.

Doctor Made Complaint.

After Baker was taken to a hospital, police questioned Dr. Berry, who several weeks ago had complained to authorities that the automobile dealer had seduced Mrs. Berry. The doctor, at the time, however, refused to prefer any charges.

Baker declined to prefer charges, but Prosecutor Smith Troy went ahead and accused the suspects of kidnaping and assault.

Troy disclosed the authorities had been told that Berry attempted to shoot the automobile dealer in a struggle at the gravel pit. He also attempted to attack Baker with a knife, Troy said, but a man known only as "Hank," the fourth man being sought, interposed both times.

Hatred Was Known.

The animosity between Berry and Baker was well known in the State capital city's social circles, police said.

McAloon, 50, was arrested at Montesano, where he formerly was town marshal. Brought to Olympia, he told Troy he was drunk the night Baker was abducted, but he remembered being with Berry and said the doctor had given him $10 to redeem a pistol from a pawn shop.

Mrs. Baker identified McAloon as one of her husband's abductors. She also identified Reddick.

Troy said that although the men had no idea of demanding ransom, they could be prosecuted on the charge because they served a false arrest warrant on Baker, seized him by force and "caused him to be secretly confined or imprisoned."

Hitler Displays Naval Might to Regent Horthy

Seeks to Impress Hungary's Chief With Parade of 117 Vessels.

By the Associated Press.

Kiel, Germany, Aug. 22.—Adolf Hitler showed Admiral Nicholas Horthy, regent of Hungary, practically all of Germany's naval might today in the longest German naval parade since the World War.

Participating were 117 vessels, representing almost all the 130,000 total tonnage of the German navy.

It was as though Hitler were notifying the world Germany once again was a formidable naval power, a demonstration calculated to impress the visiting regent whose nation the Nazis wish to bring closer within their sphere of influence.

37 Submarines Displayed.

Climax of the hour-long parade was furnished by the nation's submarines, 37 of them, more than any other single naval category.

They ranged from the most modern 700-ton submarines, each mounted with one 3½-to-4-inch gun and antiaircraft equipment, to little 250-ton craft devoid of guns and antiaircraft defenses.

The parade for Horthy was composed of one 26,000-ton battleship, three 10,000-ton "vestpocket" cruisers, four 6,000-ton light cruisers, two artillery practice ships, 12 destroyers, 12 torpedo boats, 10 torpedo-carrying speedboats, 36 mine-sweepers, the submarines and lesser craft.

The Hungarian regent, Hitler and top military figures saw the parade from the yacht Grille. They were followed by a converted torpedo boat carrying newspapermen, and then the S. S. Patria with Mme. Horthy aboard along with the Hungarian premier, Bela Imredi, and his foreign minister, Kolomon von Kanya.

An ironic feature of the day came when the Soviet freighter Felix Derzhinsky passed ships returning from the parade.

Soviets Salute Nazis.

Solemnly the Soviet vessel and the newsmen's German boat dipped their flags in salute to each other—the swastika greeting the hammer and sickle.

A clean bid for close Hungarian co-operation was made earlier in the day by Arthur Seyss-Inquart, governor of Austria, at launching ceremonies for the new 10,000-ton cruiser Prince Eugene.

"It is well intended the states of middle Europe which, correctly realizing how indissolubly they are bound up with the German Reich, make common cause with her for their own good."

Army Court Tries Jewish Girl, 13, in Death of 4 Arabs

Jerusalem, Aug. 22 (AP).—A 13-year-old Jewish girl was accused before a military tribunal today of carrying a bomb which killed four Arabs and wounded 36 in a bus explosion here August 7.

Three Arab witnesses testified they saw the defendant, Rachel Koka, take the bomb from a bag and give it to Israel Mishali, 17-year-old Jewish boy, who they said hurled it at the bus.

Both the girl and the youth pleaded not guilty. The death penalty is not applicable to them if convicted, since they are under 18.

Terrorism still agitated the Holy land. A Jewish girl was killed and another passenger injured when a bus was ambushed tonight. Four Arabs were killed in an engagement with British police near Beisan. Three Arabs from Nazareth were slain on the Acre-Safed road.

Ex-War Lord Fights Japan's 'Western Vice'

Education Minister Araki Wars Single-Handedly on Slang, Movies

By the United Press.

Tokyo, Aug. 22.—Stern old Gen. Sadao Araki, minister of education, began today a one-man crusade against girls crossing their legs while sitting down, going to movies unchaperoned and other "vices" of western civilization.

In a drive to reform the education, morals and behavior of Japan's youth, Araki is using his position as minister in an effort to restore Japanese-Chinese customs, drive out westernism and keep Japan purely Oriental.

The campaign extends to everything smacking of frivolous actions, such as sentimental admiration of foreign movie stars, flashy dressing, slang, impromptu friendships between the sexes, slouching in chairs, and playing Western games in school athletics.

To make over school athletics, Araki planned to replace the Occidental sports with interscholastic competitions like races in which contestants wear full military equipment or carry heavy objects. Military arts, such as fencing and archery, would be stressed, and teachers would be required to undergo tests to demonstrate their fitness.

Araki's reforms are based on two precepts: "The prime moving force of all things is the human being," and "National physical training is significant as the prime moving factor of national progress."

France Fears General Strike In Defense of 40-Hour Week

Paris

now that the Union Socialist ministers, heretofore a "buffer" between the conservatism of Daladier's Radical Socialists and the Socialist-Communist left, have stepped out.

One Union Socialist, Minister of National Economy Raymond Patenotre, remains in the cabinet and there was speculation that he too might resign and precipitate a Popular Front split.

If the Popular Front break-up comes it will be on Daladier's six-point recovery program, announced to the nation last night in a radio speech calling for a 48-hour work-week in the armaments industry to keep pace with the war preparations in Germany where arms plants are on a 60-hour week.

Dock Action Aggravates.

Daladier, proclaiming armies alone cannot safeguard a nation, said the 40-hour week must be made more flexible, even in the case of private industry. Leftists immediately saw a move to shatter the Popular Front labor program instituted by Former Premier Blum, Socialist Party leader.

This opposition was aggravated by Daladier's action in calling out the Senegalese troops at the Marseilles docks, a decision which Ramadier said was taken without his knowledge after his failure to name a super-arbitrator in the dockworkers' strike.

Decision as to whether Daladier's action will cause a general strike rests largely with Leon Jouhaux, president of the powerful C. G. T.

Jouhaux, who has warned of a strike epidemic if employers do not cease "meddling" with the 40-hour week, is aboard the French liner Paris, due in New York Tuesday.

Arms Plants Reopen.

He is scheduled to confer with American labor leaders before visiting Mexico, but he may hasten home to face the new crisis.

More than 200,000 workers in arms plants and other heavy industries returned to their jobs today, after a two-weeks vacation, and the plants reopened without incident.

At the same time, 200,000 coal miners awaited a strike order, in conformity with their decision of two weeks ago setting September 15 as the deadline for operators to agree to adjust wages in line with increased living costs. Their alternative, they told the mine owners, was a strike.

The Marseilles dock strike has been in progress since mid-July, tying up hundreds of ships in the chief port for commerce between France and Africa. The workers objected to Sunday and night work and, when they refused to accept a government arbiter, Daladier called out the troops and threw a cordon of mobile guards around the wharves.

A building strike is in progress at Lyons and may develop into a general strike.

GAS IS YOUR QUICK, CLEAN, ECONOMICAL SERVANT

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Mrs. Wallace . . . same town

Friends of Henry Wallace who are grooming him as a half-reluctant Presidential possibility invited John L. Lewis and his calm, intellectual wife to dinner the other evening to promote a friendship which would be harmful to neither the CIO nor the burgeoning candidacy of the Secretary of Agriculture.

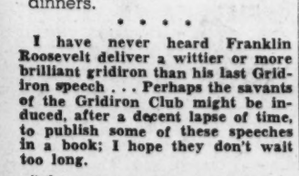
• • •

There was just a faint atmosphere of strain about the evening. Nothing you could quite put your finger on . . . Neither Henry nor John is the type who gets arms around the neck in a hurry. But this was not the reason . . .

• • • •

The real reason was that both Mrs. Lewis and the calm, beauteous, intellectual Ilo Wallace, wife of the Secretary, grew up in the same little college town of Indianola, Iowa . . . They never got very well acquainted.

Whether this was because of a few years difference in their ages, or because they lived on opposite sides of the track, or because of a difference in points of view, is anybody's guess.



"—the Senator is artistic"

When the campaigning in Maryland gets a little hotter, the New Dealers who are after Senator Tydings' scalp may revive the tale that Millard Tydings likes, for the sake of relaxation, to put on a luxurious silk dressing gown and paint from the life . . .

The mere fact that he is artistic isn't politically significant; the voters of Maryland should wait and make up their minds only after they've seen some of his paintings.

• • • •

Apparently the warm-weather controversy about Jimmy Roosevelt's earning power is far from ended . . . His advisers apparently prevailed upon him to take advantage, in his magazine response to Alva Johnston's fabulous estimate of his insurance earnings, of a neat quibble: He admitted candidly that for income tax purposes he divided his income with his charming wife, Betsey; then he printed his income tax returns, but did not print Betsey's . . .

• • • •

POTOMAC WHISPERS: Alas, some of the best speeches ever heard in Washington are delivered off the record. Admirers of Herbert Hoover (some of them still lurk in caves and secret rooms in the Capital) insist that his best speeches were the ones he delivered at the Gridiron and Press Club dinners.

• • • •

I have never heard Franklin Roosevelt deliver a wittier or more brilliant gridiron than his last Gridiron speech . . . Perhaps the savants of the Gridiron Club might be induced, after a decent lapse of time, to publish some of these speeches in a book; I hope they don't wait too long.

"—first you catch a drop"

One of the New Deal scouts who helped prepare Lowell Mellett's important report on Dixie relates that he was in a crossroads grocery in South Carolina when a waggish native walked in and announced that he had discovered a cure for the blue mould which attacks tobacco . . .

"Spray it," he said, "with a drop of WPA worker's sweat dissolved in a gallon of water . . . But first you've got to get a drop of WPA sweat."

• • • •

Most of the others are in basements; this one is bright and airy, with long French windows and a terrace outside with an excellent view of the Mall . . . Some tasty dishes are served here, too; curried shrimp with rice, fricasseed liver and eggplant creole.

Officials troop over from neighboring bureaux to the stronghold of the Federal Trade Commission for a bite.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: It's whispered that the illustrious Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen, whom the Japanese filled full of lead in China, may be the next British Ambassador to Washington, if he recovers fully; his physique must be as tough as his name . . . Ambassador Joe Kennedy's eldest son wrote a thesis at Harvard on the non-intervention pact; it has leaked out that he took a strong pro-loyalist position; for Madrid-Barcelona and against Franco.

3 More File For House on Md. Deadline

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 22.—Representative T. Alan Goldsborough, 60-year-old dean of Maryland's all-Democratic Congressional delegation, appeared assured of a tenth term in Congress tonight, on the deadline for filing certificates of candidacy.

As the midnight limit neared, irrevocably drawing Republican and Democratic battle lines in the September 12 primaries, the First District Representative, whose home is in Denton, had no Democratic opponent and no Republican had filed.

Only other possibility of opposition to his automatic re-election was that an independent candidate would file within the next five days.

Four other incumbent Congressmen face opposition; the fifth, Representative David J. Lewis, of the Sixth District, yielding his place to seek the Senate seat of Millard E. Tydings.

Late today, while a rush of candidates for the Legislature was noted in Baltimore, three new candidates for Congress filed with Secretary of State E. Ray Jones.

David L. Elliott, an Independent, of Baltimore, filed in the Second District; Andrew Kenney, a Democrat, of Baltimore, filed in the Fourth District, and Frank R. Long, a Republican, of Kensington, Montgomery County, filed in the Sixth District.

In addition to the three latest candidates, the Congressional fight shaped up this way:

Fourth District: Democrats—Representative Ambrose J. Kennedy, Walter V. Wentworth and Francis A. Michel. Republicans—Daniel Ellison (all from Baltimore).

Fifth District: Democrats—Representative Stephen Gambrill, Laurel, and John William Klemm, Mount Rainier.

Winship Suggests Substitute Mural Of Puerto Ricans

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Aug. 22 (AP).—A substitution for the Rockwell Kent mural in the Postoffice building at Washington, D. C., was proposed today in a special legislative message by Gov. Blanton Winship.

Besides depicting Puerto Ricans as Africans, the mural showed an airmail messenger delivering a message from Alaskans who joined in a plea for Puerto Rican independence. This part of the mural later was painted over by another artist.

Gov. Winship said he was in accord with Puerto Ricans that the mural was in bad taste and, although he did not question Kent's artistic abilities, he recommended an appropriation of $3,000 for another artist.

Frank Long to Run For Md. House Seat

Frank R. Long, Kensington, Md., yesterday filed with the Secretary of State at Annapolis for Congressman from the Sixth Maryland District, subject to the Republican primary, September 12.

In announcing his candidacy, Long, an attorney with offices in Washington, said for the past seven years he had been studying "the ramifications of the New Deal" and had found "the jokers outnumber the cards."

Long's platform includes proposals to tax money withheld from circulation, elimination of wage and hour laws and substitution of the payment of a "maximum weekly wage per hour in periods of seasonal idleness, to be paid out of a reserve created by contributions from employe, Federal Government and co-operating States."

Insurance Clerk Turns Jungle Collection Over to Zoo

Costello Craig, 23, an insurance clerk who has the jungle in his blood, has returned from six weeks in Central America, where he collected snakes and other animals which he contributed to the Zoo. Craig (left) and Headkeeper Roy Jennier are shown with three of the young boa constrictors which were among the snakes brought back from Guatemala. The collection included three coatis, one of which is shown. The coati is a mammal related to the raccoon.

Colored Man Admits He Is 'Pants' Robber

Five Victims Identify 21-Year-Old as Burglar Who Took $500.

Identified by five victims, a 21-year-old colored man last night confessed to being the long-sought "pants burglar," alleged to have obtained $500 in a series of thefts here, according to police.

He was arrested yesterday, after a description of the early morning second-story burglar was given police by Ralph Pope, of 1622 Eastern avenue northeast. Pope, awakened last week by the thief, wrestled with him, knocked him down the stairs, and chased him barefooted for a block.

Others to identfy the burglar, who only took men's pants and women's purses—discarding both in the street after taking the cash—included Mrs. James E. Harding, of 4129 Gault place northeast, and Mrs. M. Ulitzky, 4001 Gault place northeast.

U. S. Courts Here, In Virginia to Fix Jails' Jurisdiction

Julia Sanders, 22, of New York City, sentenced to Occoquan Workhouse on an intoxication charge July 30, today will be released on personal bond of $100 by the Court of Appeals here, preliminary to appeals hearing scheduled for October to determine whether District or Virginia Federal courts have jurisdiction over Washington prisoners jailed at Lorton or Occoquan, Va.

Last Friday Miss Sanders petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, charging she had been sentenced without assistance of counsel.

The petition was refused by Justice F. D. Letts, of United States District Court here, on ground that he did not have jurisdiction. The case was appealed.

Meanwhile, William F. Lowry, a District prisoner at Lorton, filed a petition for a similar writ in Norfolk Federal court, alleging he should have been released June 23, 1937. Hearing will be held Monday.

Baltimore Considered For Methodist Session

Baltimore, Aug. 22 (AP).—A commission of ministers and laymen representing the three branches of the Methodist Church in the United States today inspected Baltimore's facilities for the United Conference of Methodism to be held next April.

Although the conference site has not been selected, Baltimore has been suggested because the Methodist Church was organized 154 years ago here at the Lovely Lane Meeting House.

Two Added to Faculty At St. John's College

Annapolis, Aug. 22 (AP).—Scott Buchanan, dean of St. John's College, announced the appointment of two new members of the college faculty today, Ray S. Alleman and Edward F. Lathrop, jr.

Lathrop, who was graduated from St. John's this June, will be assistant coach in football and lacrosse, and direct the physical training class as well.

Alleman, who is appointed as assistant professor of physics in the elective program, received his A. B. in 1933, and his M. A. in 1934, from Brigham Young University, at Provo, Utah.

Norfolk Slayer Hunted.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—A transient colored man was sought tonight by South Norfolk police for questioning in connection with the slaying of Ernest L. Cowand, night watchman at the James G. Wilson Corporation, of South Norfolk. Cowand was killed Saturday while making his rounds of the plant.

Hackers' Union May Form Own Insurance Firm

Mutual Urged as Way to Lower Liability Coverage Costs Here.

Formation of a mutual insurance company to write policies for the District's new compulsory liability law will be proposed at a mass meeting of taxi drivers to be held Thursday under auspices of local union, No. 447, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. Place of the meeting has not yet been announced.

The drivers' union, which received its A. F. of L. charter last night at a meeting held in Typographical Temple, 423 G street northwest, heard John K. Keane, labor attorney, urge establishment of a mutual company as the best method of holding insurance costs to a minimum.

A mutual company, he said, would be obliged to charge drivers the same rate, $22.50 a month, as any private concern writing liability insurance here, but would be able to return to policy-holders all cash over actual disbursements for claims and administration costs of the company. Actual cost to drivers would be no more than $50 a year, he contended.

Drivers voted down by a large majority a motion, put forward by William Frye, calling for injunction proceedings against the liability law.

W. W. Dawson Files For Md. Senator

Walter W. Dawson, Rockville, filed last night for State Senator, subject to the Republican primary September 12. He was one of three Republicans and two Independent Democrats who entered their candidacies with the board of election supervisors shortly before the midnight deadline.

Other Republican candidates were Capt. Chester Wells, Chevy Chase, for county commissioner, and Ralph M. Seebold, Silver Spring, for delegate to the State convention.

The Democrats were John H. Gassaway, Gaithersburg, and Albert E. Brault, Bethesda, both candidates for delegates to the State convention.

Pay Rolls in Maryland Register Little Change

Baltimore, Aug. 22 (AP).—Pay rolls and employment levels showed little change in July compared with June, the State Labor and Statistics Department reported today, but were well under the figures recorded in July a year ago.

The July, 1938, factory employment was 19.1 per cent under the levels of July, 1937, while pay rolls were down 26.8 per cent, the department noted, with several individual industries reporting decreases of nearly 50 per cent in one or the other of the two classifications.

The change from June to July in pay rolls was a decrease of one-tenth of 1 per cent, with employment down seven-tenths of 1 per cent.

Zoo Gets Clerk's Collection Of Snakes Picked Up on Tour

Insurance Man, Who Catches Reptiles Just for Fun, Brings Along Turtles, Coatis and Crocodiles From Central American Jungle.

A poisonous fer-de-lance, three big boa constrictors and eight little ones, four crocodiles and five turtles and about 30 other reptiles from darkest America—not to mention a couple of hairy tarantulas and a trio of playful coatis—arrived yesterday at the Zoo as the gift of a young Washington insurance clerk who is also something of a herpetologist.

Just returned from Guatemala, Costello Craig, 23-year-old employe of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., brought his weird cargo straight to the reptile house, bade his pets an affectionate good-by and steeled himself to return to the rigors of a Washington summer after six carefree weeks in the Central American jungle.

A McKinley High School boy who has been "collecting snakes since I was a kid," Craig said this was his first expedition outside the United States. As the reptiles were being uncrated at the Zoo, Craig lovingly picked them up—and reporters gingerly backed away.

Grasping the fer-de-lance firmly behind the ears, Craig explained that this was the commonest of poisonous tropical American snakes. "An untreated bite will cause death in four or five hours," he observed as he forced the hissing, squirming, 5-foot reptile to bare his fangs. Reporters backed farther away.

Very rare in collections, Craig said, is the "mildly poisonous" vine snake, which stretches out to a length of four feet, and has a diameter of about half an inch. Another variety he presented to the Zoo is the spotted rat snake, which glides like a streak of lightning through the jungle trees.

Craig said that the eight little boa constrictors he brought back were born to one of the adult boas in his collection. As a pair of the larger ones—they are 5½ feet long—wound around his arms, he observed that "they aren't rare at all, but I saw 'em so I brought 'em back."

Roy Jennier, keeper of the reptile house, added that "we sometimes find them tangled up in a shipment of bananas."

Craig said he caught five tarantulas in Guatemala, but one of the spiders turned out to be a cannibal—so now there are only two.

Most popular of the animals he brought back will probably be the three little coatis, lively tropical relatives of the raccoon. They were promptly placed in the small mammal house, but all the others are to be put in the reptile house.

Craig said he has been bitten twice by copperheads and once by a timber rattler. "But be sure to say," he cautioned, "that it was never while catching them. It was when I handled them as pets, and just through my own carelessness. You see, a good snake man isn't supposed to be bitten in the field."

The young collector declared he didn't see much danger in his trip to the Guatemalan jungles.

Yeggs Get Away With $500 From Downtown Safe

Police feared the invasion of a new safe-breaking gang here last night, as cracksmen jimmied open the safe at Federal Baking Shop, 611 Fourteenth street northwest, and escaped—via the front door—with $500.

The theft was similar to the "clean job" performed last week on a safe in a downtown Ninth street clothes store.

Manager Dewey Larson told police he had left the bake shop at 6:30 p. m. and returned two hours later. He found the front door open, and the safe rifled.

Detectives found that the cracksmen—believed to be two—had climbed up a telegraph pole to the roof of the adjacent building, and had entered the building by a clothes-line rope ladder dropped from the skylight.

Services Set Tomorrow For Mrs. F. M. Kremkau

Services will be held tomorrow for Mrs. Flora May Kremkau, 65, of 1319 Fern street northwest, from 9 to 11 a. m. in United Brethren Church, North Capitol and R streets. Burial will follow in Washington Memorial Park.

Mrs. Kremkau, Washington's sixty-first traffic victim, was killed Sunday in an auto accident at Georgia and Florida avenue northwest.

A native of Cloe, Pa., Mrs. Kremkau came to Washington in 1910. Surviving are her husband, W. C. Kremkau, building contractor; a son, Omer, and a daughter, Mrs. Homer K. Butler, all of Washington.

Sniff, Then We Cry, We Wish We'd Die; It's Hay Fever Time

An eye turns red, a teardrop falls, the day of mourning is at hand; the wind has blown across the fields—hay fever strikes a happy land.

Sniff, sniff, kerchoo; kerchoo, sniff, sniff—such is the order of the day; with wheeze and gasp and heaving breath, we do not feel like work or play.

To Washington at last it came, on August twenty-second; and ne'er before so temptingly have sea and hilltops beckoned. We dodge into the air-cooled room the ragweed's pollen far to flee, but like an ancient mariner, it boldly stoppeth one of three.

Relentlessly it holds its grasp, until the frosts at length do come; the thought of swiftly nearing fall—of comfort gives the merest crumb.

Ball Opens Rural Mail Convention

Letter Carriers, Wives Dance at Reception in Mayflower.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 rural letter carriers arrived in Washington yesterday for their thirty-fifth annual convention, which opens today, and went directly to the Postoffice Department.

Hundreds of the postmen and their wives and children could be found in the corridors of the building at any hour of the day. Official hosts were Acting Postmaster General J. W. Cole and Supt. J. Ed Cooper, of the Rural Mail Division.

Although the Rural Mail Division seems like home to them, they're more familiar with all the functions of the department than are their city cousins. "We're the only ones in the organization that provide complete postal service," President Raymond H. Combs, of Churchville, N. Y., explained.

"Our patrons count on us for more than delivery of their letters. They buy their stamps from us, give us their packages for parcel post and send money orders through us."

He feels that "postoffices on wheels" is a more adequate term for them than merely "letter carriers."

Last night the carriers forgot the long miles and dusty roads which are their everyday lot and attended a gala pre-convention reception and ball in the main ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

The festivities started with a program by The Cowboy Band, an organization of Hardin-Simmons University students from Texas. The 22 boys sang and played for the letter carriers. Rex Felker startled them with a demonstration of rope tricks, and 11-year-old Philip Cadenhead, of Weinert, Tex., mascot for the band, played his guitar.

Phil brought with him a collection of seven horned toads, bona fide descendants of "Old Rip," the toad who lived for 30 years in the cornerstone of the Eastland, Tex. courthouse. He wants to show us Easterners what horned toads look like—and sell them if he can to "pay for my eats."

Later the delegates were entertained by the more talented of their fellow-carriers and watched a program of vaudeville acts. After the grand march, the dancing started and continued throughout the evening.

At 8 a. m. today—they're used to early rising—the postmen will gather in Constitution Hall. President Combs will call the convention to order, and Postmaster Vincent Burke, of Washington, will give an address of welcome. Roll will be called by National Secretary Max B. Lightner, of Duncannon, Pa., and Mrs. Marten Merryfield, of Middlefield, Ohio, national secretary of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Principal speaker at the morning session will be Postmaster General James A. Farley. Addresses will be made by other officials of the Postoffice Department and by members of Congressional committees concerned with the problems of the letter carriers.

The official photograph will be taken at the close of the meeting. This afternoon has been left free for sightseeing. Later in the day a tree will be dedicated at the Sylvan Theater.

The Presidents' and Secretaries' Clubs, composed of past officers of the National Rural Letter Carriers Association, will hold its annual banquet tonight. State dinners will be held and many of the carriers will take moonlight boat rides on the river.

While their elders listen to speeches and attend to official business this morning, the junior carriers will meet at 9 a. m. in the garden room of the Mayflower for an informal "get-acquainted" program.

The Spewacks' Own Adaptation of Their Stage Hit Detonates With Gatling-Gun Lunacy; Capitol Stars Win Honors; Music on Way; About the National.

IT WAS not so long ago when the movies, timorous in their milk-tooth babyhood, violently resented having fun poked at them—especially by the parent theater of the living drama. When the cinema finally plucked up courage enough to harpoon itself gently with a film version of "Once in a Lifetime," it was patted vigorously on the back as a mature "art" that could stand on its own feet and tell its traducers where to head in, as the saying goes. With a fine record of productional achievements to its credit since, the screen now is willing to kid the pants off itself and lead the pack in the merry business of having fun at its own expense.

BELL.

Anyone feeling that this is a strong dash of overstatement has only to take a gander at the Warner Brothers' film version of Bella and Samuel Spewack's comedy of "Boy Meets Girl" to learn what conservatism in speech really is like. If "Boy Meets Girl" doesn't take picture-making for a ride, then "Marie Antoinette" is a Mack Sennett short!

At yesterday afternoon's preview screening of this mad picture, the case-hardened guys and gals of the drayma desks were jarred out of their dog-days doldrums and practically rolled in the aisles by the trip-hammer speed of one of the craziest, most cogent (paradoxically) and most cyclonic satires of the celluloid season. The thing never lets up in its energetic attack on all of the fads, foibles, fol-de-rols and fatuous pretentions popularly attributed to everybody in Hollywood from the big-wigs to the nit-wits. Since the film makes those two seem to be the same, perhaps we had better say from the moguls to the mice, who are the extras on any studio lot. It doesn't make much difference what you call them, as a matter of fact, because everybody out there, quite obviously, is off his nut and completely screwy, to be both elegant and frank about it.

"Boy Meets Girl," of course, is a comic item that could be ruined by feeble or laggard playing. So the Warners cast Jimmy Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Marie Wilson, Ralph Bellamy, Frank McHugh, Dick Foran and Bruce Lester in the roles of prime importance. All of these agile funsters have recently demonstrated their capabilities in this sort of thing—Bellamy in "The Awful Truth," O'Brien and Foran in "Cowboy From Brooklyn," Cagney and McHugh in virtually everything they have ever touched, if your memory needs jogging.

Some of the others are making their first important marks here, notably Marie Wilson and Bruce Lester. This Marie Wilson has been on view for a considerable time now, but usually in some minor assignment that has given scant hint of the girl's ability to step up into the front rank of comediennes. It is in this character—Susie, the commissary waitress—that many of the comedy's most inflammable qualities are embodied, but in making their own screen adaptation of their stage play the Spewacks have circumvented the arched eyebrows of the Will H. Hays office in a deft and decorous manner. Susie's motherhood was wholly chaste—even if you don't find it out until late in the picture.

The Warners are reputed to have spent a prodigious sum for the screen rights to this play. On the evidence of yesterday's preview, they got their money's worth. So will the public when "Boy Meets Girl" opens on the Earle screen Friday.

As the "Going Native" revue settles into its stretch run, at Loew's Capitol Theater, it is Helen Forrest who seems to be emerging as the outstanding, sure-fire hit of the show. No novice at microphoning torch and comic songs to expectant listeners, Miss Forrest has to all intents and purposes "stopped the show" at every performance. That her applause may be accepted as a true barometer of her popularity is indicated by the fact that on the first count of the ballots cast in the Ross Jewelry Co.'s prize contest—a trip to Bermuda for the winner—she was leading the field.

* * * *

While we are on the subject, Miss Forrest is not the only member of the "Going Native" cast who is coming in for recognition.

At tonight's last performance—probably at a little after 9 o'clock—Maj. Ernest Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, will present Lee Everett, master of ceremonies of the sixth annual frolic, with a gold badge, making him an honorary member of the local gendarmerie.

This is in recognition of Lee's indefatigable service on behalf of the Washington safety campaign, being waged by the police, the newspapers and all civic-minded citizens and organizations. As "Old Sol" himself, Everett has been "plugging" this crusade on his early morning hours on the air for the past year and a half or so.

After tonight, when you hear Lee Everett's mellow accents through the loudspeaker, it will be "the law" speaking. I have always thought Lee a swell guy. Hope he'll prove one in a "pinch."

* * * *

Still plenty of music in the offing, wherever that is. Next week's biggest concentration of melody, needless to say, will be in "Alexander's Ragtime Band," at Loew's Palace, in which 26 of Irving Berlin's best tunes take a new lease on life. The miraculous effect in this picture is as if they never had been heard before. Opening contemporaneously on the stage at the Earle will be Tony Martin and his orchestra to headline the vaudeville portion of the program—thus placing husband and wife in active competition against each other in the same block. Alice Faye, star of "Alexander's Ragtime Band," in private life, is Mrs. Tony Martin. And that isn't all. Saturday night, Sammy Kaye and his "swing and sway" music will be aboard the S. S. Potomac for two moonlight cruises in an effort to beat Paul Whiteman's capacity business of last Saturday night—a good trick, even if you can't do it.

Manager Edmund Plohn, of the National Theater, as yet has received no definite, official word with regard to the bookings for the new season at his tabernacle of the drama.

In a conversation with the Berry Wall of E street yesterday afternoon, it was learned that many plays are tentatively in prospect for a season that may begin on September 12, but up to yesterday no contracts had been signed in the New York office.

Mr. Plohn plans a trip to Broadway next week-end and conjectures that he will return about a week from today armed to the teeth with important information for his patrons.

If the National opens on September 12, present indications are that it will be with Guthrie McClintic's new comedy, starring Dorothy Gish, who hasn't been seen locally for many years, although Sister Lillian has made recent hits as Ophelia in "Hamlet" and with Burgess Meredith in "Star Wagon." That "hit" business sort of runs in the family.

So we have received our 1938-39 edition of the International Motion Picture Almanac, an invaluable handbook, gotten out by Martin Quigley, publisher of the Motion Picture Herald, and edited by Terry Ramsaye, managing editor of that foremost of the motion picture trade journals. The Motion Picture Almanac is a compendium of all manner of useful information, running to a modest total of 1,250 pages.

An-Evening's-Reading Note.

I mean to read the Almanac through—as soon as I've finished "Anthony Adverse" and "Gone With the Wind!"

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, Aug. 22.

WE WERE waiting for a street car in Venice and, believe it or not, one came along. It operates at the Lido and circles the island which juts between the lagoon and the sea. The Savoia Marchetti which brought us to Italy had climbed quickly above Budapest's citadel on the Danube and one hour later it banked for the drop to Flugfeld Aspern, the aerodrome at Vienna . . . Again, we walked into the waiting room, where the matchboxes are inscribed "Ein Volk, Ein Reich, Ein Fuehrer." . . . Behind the wire fence table-sitters greeted their comrades with clumsy Nazi salutes. A blonde young lady leaning against the fence clinched her cigarette and placed the remaining half in her purse.

* * * *

NEXT DOOR five emigrants leaving Austria forever watched quietly as their luggage underwent a thorough search including the lining of all their clothing. Two green uniformed Nazi officials barked a command to us to get back into the waiting room and stop poking around.

* * * *

CAMOUFLAGED autos reminiscent of 1917 brought the luggage to the plane. At 1:30 we took off across Graz and Klagenfurt, high above the Alps. When the altimeter registered 4,000 meters the wireless operator left his chair and distributed circulars containing instructions in the use of the oxygen equipment. The windows, unlike those of the other planes in which we had traveled, were gray and not transparent until after we had crossed the Alps into Italy and the Bay of Trieste spread below us. The plane dropped to 300 meters, raced down the shore to Venice and the waters of the Adriatic.

* * * *

WE DINED at the Lido Casino, a new million-dollar edifice facing the sea.

We returned to Venice by speedboat and a gondola brought us to the Grand Canal, where, from the boats illuminated by multi-colored oil lamps, Venetian families sang and played the serenate sentimentale. Our gondolier regretted that he could not sing for us because of a law imposing a $15 penalty for water hackies caught giving vent to operatic urge, and so instead he dug his oar into the moonlit waters of the canal and showed us the home of Marco Polo, the hall which had housed Casanova and the palace Barbara Hutton had presented to Mdivani.

* * * *

IN THE morning we returned again to the Lido to swim in the warm waters of the sea. Behind the cabanas an orchestra played "My Old Kentucky Home."

* * * *

THAT SAME day, before the sun had set behind the arches of the Coliseum, we rode in a fiacro through the ruins of Rome and the broken temples now become monuments to Caesar. A blackshirt placed his hand over the lens of our movie camera in front of the Palazzo Venezia and warned us not to photograph the balcony from which Il Duce makes his speeches. The black-shirted, green-shirted and blue-shirted Fascisti, who have been instructed to keep away from the tourist cities, swarm in all their arrogant glory through the streets of Rome, their uniforms symbolizing a barbarism older than the ruins the city features.

* * * *

WE HAD flown to Italy's capital across the san Marino hills in a plane whose most eminent passengers were four full-uniformed Nazi army officials, their dress complete to the monocle and shaven bullneck. They were met at the airport by Il Duce's representatives. So intent were they upon exhibiting the perfection of their heel-clicking, strutting and saluting that they paid little attention to another detail—the matter of baggage—for in the special car which took them to the city they placed a number of bags including one which didn't belong to them—ours. Two hours later we recovered it from a porter carrying it through the lobby of our hotel.

Olney Theater

This was to be the high point of the Olney season and as far as its star is concerned it is. Perhaps later in the week when ease and lines both begin to take their proper place in the ensemble playing, the play itself will catch up with its leading lady.

In Mme. Eugenie Leontovich, Olney has the grand duchess that London and Los Angeles and the northern circuit saw in "Tovarich" and it would be hard to find a more completely captivating duchess. Mme. Leontovich is warm and lovely and certainly regal for all of the very short distance from tip of her toes to top of her head.

Unfortunately, Mr. Cochran has given her and the Deval-Sherwood play a totally inadequate cast that dims the charm and glow of what should be a heart-warming evening in the theater.

Tovarich tells the sentimental and very amusing tale of Prifice Mikail and his wife, the Grand Duchess Tatiana. White Russians, who escape from the Bolsheviks, only after torture, to become impoverished exiles in Paris. Penniless, they are reduced to stealing artichokes and caviar for lack of food (Tatiana does that) and staying in bed for lack of clothing (Mikail does that), while the bank balance in the very good Bank of France mounts to a mere 4,000,000,000 francs. The money is, you see, not theirs but Russia's, entrusted to them by the late Czar. When four departments of the French government reveal that their thefts are known and threaten, not to punish them, but to pay their bills, possibly subtracting the cost from the Russian money, Mikail and Tatiana are further reduced—this time to job-hunting.

It is not an easy play to handle, being largely dependent upon subtle and excellent dialogue for its comedy and much of its charm growing out of sympathetic understanding and inter-playing between actors. Certainly it is nothing to thrust inexperienced actors into, for they slow its timing and destroy its mood.

There is no one on the boards today with more fire and spirit and true temperament than Mme. Leontovich. We wish we could see her more often. Here she works as a Trojan and a gallant trouper should to keep the play going and give it meaning.

She is aided by Leslie Denison in the companion role of Prince Mikail, and will gain even greater support from him when he gets beyond his present uncertainty. He does not seem to be royal, as his grand duchess is royal, but he warms to the role and his stature increases with the evening. Gordon Richards is excellent as Charles Dupont, puzzled employer of the surprising servants, contributing welcome comedy fillips where most needed. Howard Ferguson, in the important role of Commissar Gorotchenko, who would like those billions of francs for the Red Russia he loves, is well-spoken.

The three sets are adequate, the first garret room being considerably more than that, although its Parisian poverty-stricken atmosphere is a bit impaired by the brand new maple bed with its candlewick spread!

DOROTHEA LEWIS.

Glen Echo Park

MacWilliams is the "swingy" name that is drawing the dancers to the Spanish Garden Ballroom at Glen Echo Park, and over the week-end the jitterbugs were there in all their glory. In addition to Mac's merry music, there was much entertainment provided by Jack Schaeffer and vocalist Jimmy Bright. Popular also, and deservedly so, was the Crystal Pool which continues to cater to the heat weary.

Every visitor to the park is enthused over the World Cruise and this device has been a paying investment since its installation. Visitors to the park also flocked to the waterway canal and enjoyed the fast streamlined boats. Kids and grown-ups alike had a wonderful time on the new streamlined cars of the new dodgem rides.

Aeroplane swings, the coaster dip, whip, midway and smaller amusements were also favored with the crowds. Picnic parties over Saturday and Sunday were numerous.

'Alabama' Ably Performed at The Roadside

By Nelson B. Bell.

First presented in the Madison Square Theater, New York, in the spring of 1890, "Alabama," Augustus Thomas' fine old play of Southern sentiment, with its gentle soothing of the wounds left by the War Between the States, last night was given a sympathetic and thoughtful revival at the Roadside Theater, where it will constitute the bill for the ensuing fortnight.

"Alabama" was so graciously written, with so definite and appealing a purpose, that it affords slight opportunity for the hissing and cat-calls that have become an eagerly anticipated part of the pleasure of audiences at the Roadside's melodramas. The four acts of this venerable work are less violent than they are intelligently argumentative and tenderly romantic. While Thomas, one of the foremost playwrights of his day, reveals a tendency toward purling phrases that are at times a little too limpid for complete intellectual comfort, in fashioning the present offering he indulged in few other extravagances either of speech or action. The basis of his play is sound and its exposition complete.

If there was a criticism to be made of last night's performance, it was that it was too slowly paced and seriously underplayed. There are telling "punch lines" in every scene of dramatic importance that require more emphasis than they were given last evening to lend the play the variety of mood and tempo essential to its greatest measure of forcefulness.

The time of the play is 1883, only 18 years after the close of the Civil War, and the scenes are laid on and around the plantation of the aged Col. Preston, whose prejudices are grim realities, to him, and whose life has been harassed by the loss of both material and sentimental riches. The struggle between the States divided his family between the Gray and the Blue and the projected laying of a railroad across his bayou by Northern interests serves only to arouse bitter memories of antagonism and hatreds that time has not healed. The manner of circumventing the injustices of this point of view, as they pertain to the second and third generations, comprises the crux of the drama.

It is a well-chosen cast that interprets this surviving bit of almost a half-century ago. Histrionic honors were shared equally opening night by Ann Ives and George Farrington, with J. Edmund Veitch, Lansing Hall, Don Muller, S. Carlton Ayres and Ralph Fowler lending authority and weight to a competent supporting ensemble. Miss Ives' portrayal of a grief-stricken and persecuted widow was beautifully sustained, although at times so subdued that an occasional line was inaudible even to the fifth row. Mr. Farrington was the lone member of the cast who pointed up the dramatic impact of speeches that expressed both a militant justice and a fine Southern chivalry. As chief figures in the youthful romance representing both sides of the War of 1861-65, Lansing Hall and Don Mller were effective symbols of a viewpoint new and incomprehensible to Col. Preston. S. Carlton Ayres' Col. Preston was played in an even key, as was Ralph Fowler's Capt. Davenport, Col. Preston's unrecognized son.

The atmospheric settings devised by Henry C. Pearson were helpful to the play's integrity and the costumes designed by Dorothy Croissant in keeping with the period and the locale of a vintage romance that is well worth seeing by any generation of Americans.

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Aug. 22.—Hollywood no sooner recovers from one Federal investigation when another pops up. Now they're out for the Communists. Who contributed what, why and how much? Sure we have Communists. Every community has. We had one running for Governor, and, if my memory serves, wasn't there one running for the Presidency? And don't we recognize Russia?

HEDDA HOPPER

You can't keep a lot of temperamental people from contributing to crackpot ideas. But with the money the Government takes out of Hollywood in taxes you'd think it would try to protect that investment and keep the gold flowing rather than kill the goose that laid the golden egg. Why not stop scattering mud and slinging a lot of silly inuendos? I'm not a Communist and never will be, but I do believe in fair play and we're not getting it.

The other day, in front of a Broadway movie house, a terrific crowd had gathered. It turned out to be Boy Scouts waiting for their good deed. The Scoutmaster blew his whistle and said, "Now, boys, I want you to be quiet, orderly and silent, except when its funny, then you may laugh." The picture they saw was "Blockade."

We should do things the English way. When Sylvia Sidney arrived in London, and wanted to be alone, the papers merely said: "That woman's back again."

Doug and Sylvia Fairbanks have leased a little lean-to in Hartz. Built by J. P. Morgan, it contains 82 rooms. Just large enough to house them and Doug's new monocle. When Willie Wyler wired asking if they could put up his brother "Will try to squeeze him in." try to squeeze him in."

Don't train your boy to be an actor, train him to use his fists. It will get him a contract quicker in the movies at $1,000 per, which is Slapsie Maxie's chicken feed. He's making headway with his English, too. Corrected himself by saying ain't instead of is not. "Only fighters and sissies use the latter," sezze.

From Spain Roger Marchetti postcarded Howard Hughes as follow. "It's a great place and you can walk up to anybody and say, 'Louis B. Mayer,' and no one answers back. They love the movies. The current rage is 'The Ten Commandments.' Wish you were here instead of me."

After Virginia Bruce gave a party for her little girl her guests left loaded with baskets filled with presents. When Spencer Tracy's daughter arrived home with hers, her brother took a look at the trinkets and said, "Gee, you'd think those people had money to burn the way they put on the dog."

In spite of Lupe's divorce, she still drives to the Tropics almost every night to take Johnny home. At a party the other day, our best swimmer dove in with all his clothes on.

Irene Castle, who has done so much for dogs in Chicago and was several times involved in lawsuits for their protection, arrived in town the day before the Tailwaggers party. No one remembered to invite her.

Irene's at R. K. O., sitting in on her own life story and will design costumes for Ginger Rogers. She has a private office with her name on the door, a secretary, two telephones, and nothing to do. When the phone rings, she jumps to answer it, only to find a salesman wanting to sell her an ad in a trade paper.

She's being dated by Charlie Butterworth and Tim Durant. May the best man win. She's a darling. Wish someone would ask her to act in a picture.

Boyd Knocks Out Nichy in Second Round

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, AUGUST 23, 1938 15

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

"Five dollars or five days." That was the decision heard by Jimmy Slattery yesterday. In his time, Jimmy Slattery had heard a hundred decisions. But they were not the stern, begone-with-you pronouncements of a police court judge, impatient at the long procession of morning court culprits of the night before.

POVICH.

In his time, the decisions that Jimmy Slattery heard most always favored Slattery. They were the decisions of prize ring judges and Slattery heard himself pronounced the winner over such as Jack Delaney (twice), Maxey Rosenbloom (three times) and Tom Heeney and King Levinsky.

He was the Buffalo dancing master then, the finest young prospect in the prize ring. The Slattery form and figure was the envy of every kid who pulled on a glove. He had no great punch, as punching power is rated in the prize ring, but apparently he didn't need it. His footwork was the very pinnacle of the art. He could jab and dance away and he knew how to slip punches and ride with them and protect his classic physiognomy.

Yesterday afternoon he mellowed a bit after police court news reporters paid his $5 fine, which was something of a feat in newspaper circles inasmuch as the traditional newspaper payday is Tuesday. The fellow whose fists had earned him $600,000, according to his own estimates, couldn't produce what he called "a fin" and the local bastille was beckoning.

Product of Buffalo Rings.

"It's the same old story, I guess," said 34-year-old Jimmy Slattery in explaining his plight. "I didn't know how to keep my money. I went up fast and came down quick. When they gave the decision to Maxie Rosenbloom in a bout for the lightheavyweight title of the world in 1930, that was the turning point for me. I thought I won that one. It was my last good fight. I drifted into WPA jobs and then they petered out. I'm at rock-bottom now."

Slattery flashed across the fistic firmament in 1921 as a 17-year-old kid sensation under the sponsorship of Charlie Murray, famous Buffalo promoter. It was this same Charlie Murray who gave a guy named Jack Dempsey his first break in the East. And now we will digress a bit to tell about that.

Jack Kearns had Dempsesy in the East in 1918 and was finding it hard to get fighting jobs for him. Dempsey's one-round knockout by Jim Flynn the year before and his defeat by fat Willie Meehan caused Eastern promoters to look with suspicion on Kearns' young heavyweight. Despite the claims that Kearns was making for his man, it was a long time between bouts for young Dempsey.

At Buffalo, Murray was engaged in the promotion of a fight between Fred Fulton and Carl Morris. They were a pair of "white hopes" who had been beaten to the championship by Jess Willard, and now they were being prepped to provide Willard with his next challenger. The winner of the Fulton-Morris bout was to get the next shot at big Jess.

But a few days before the fight, Fulton took a run-out. He refused to go through with the affair and Murray was in a frenzy. He cast about for a substitute for Fulton and Kearns talked him into giving Dempsey the chance against Morris. With misgivings, Murray made the match and told Dempsey to report immediately to Buffalo for public workouts.

Fast Talking by Kearns.

Murray visited Kearns and Dempsey in their hotel room when the pair arrived in Buffalo. "Where's your heavyweight?" he asked Kearns impatiently. "There he is," said Kearns pointing to an outstretched figure on the bed, "the greatest piece of fighting machinery in this generation, the coming heavyweight champion of the world, the ——"

"Wait a minute," said Murray. "What's going on here. I thought you said you had a heavyweight. My Gawd, that fellow's no heavyweight. Morris'll kill him. He can't weigh over 170."

"A hundred and seventy-five," corrected Kearns, "and——"

"The fight's off!" yelled Murray. "I can't let this go on. They'd boo me out of town. I can't send a middleweight in there against Morris. You've turned me around. I ordered a man and you brought me a boy. It's off, I tell you!"

But the fight wasn't called off. Kearns persuaded Murray to let Dempsey go in the ring with Morris and that's what happened. But he didn't stay in the ring long with Morris. He walked out within 3 minutes, the winner by a one-round knockout.

That fight, as you know, led to the Fred Fulton fight for Dempsey. And it was Dempsey's 18-second knockout of Fulton that earned him his shot at Willard's title in 1919.

Slattery Rocketed to Top.

Murray, after his "discovery" of young Slattery, found he had tapped a veritable flow of gold. Pitted against the best in the lightheavyweight class, Slattery packed 'em in for Murray. But Buffalo was too small to hold a fellow who could box like young Slattery. He was being compared to Corbett as an artist with gloves.

Into Madison Square Garden he went to meet the best and beat the best. When Tommy Loughran vacated the lightheavy division to campaign among the heavies, Slattery was recognized as tops in his division. He was still under voting age when he beat Young Stribling and Jack Delaney and Maxie Rosenbloom.

He won Madison Square Garden's elimination tournament to find a successor to Loughran, but the National Boxing Association refused to recognize him as the champion and ordered him to fight Rosenbloom again for that honor. Slattery lost that one, by a decision, in 15 rounds. He was never a power among the lightheavies after that.

It was one of life's little coincidences that found both Slattery and Jack Dempsey in Washington yesterday. Dempsey was here as a prosperous restaurant owner, comfortable for life with his paid-up annuities and property holdings. Slattery couldn't "dig up a fin" for a police court fine. There ought to be a moral in this somewhere.

Pirates Win 4-2 Victory Over Cubs

Tobin Limits Losers to Five Hits; Rally in 7th Decides.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—Big Jim Tobin hurled five-hit ball and his Pirate mates bunched four of their hits for three runs in the seventh inning today to give Pittsburgh a 4-2 victory over the Cubs in the final game of their series.

A crowd of 13,738, which brought attendance for the three-day set to better than 70,000, saw the Pirates tack another half-game to their National League lead. They now are five and a half games in front of the New York Giants, most of whom were spectators at today's game.

Pittsburgh got the jump on the Cubs by scoring a run in the first on bases on balls to Lee Handley and Lloyd Waner and Johnny Rizzo's single to left. The Cubs tied it up in the fifth on a two-bagger by Phil Cavarretta, an infield out and Billy Jurges' long fly, but the Bucs put the game on ice in the seventh, and drove Clay Bryant to the showers in the process.

Lloyd Waner opened the frame with a single to center, but was forced by Brother Paul. Rizzo then smacked another single and the bases were filled when Arky Vaughan drew a walk. Gus Suhr's smash off Carl Reynolds' glove scored Waner and left the bases filled, and two more runs came in on Pep Young's safety to left. That was enough for Bryant, who had issued seven passes and was constantly behind the batter.

Tobin, who walked only two men, gave up the second Cub run in the ninth, when Reynolds clouted his third homer of the year into the left field bleachers.

Reds Triumph, 11-4; Derringer Wins 17th.

St. Louis, Aug. 22 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds broke loose with an 18-hit attack today against four St. Louis Cardinal pitchers to give Paul Derringer his seventeenth victory of the season, 11 to 4.

The Reds exploded for five runs in the fourth, the inning after Manager Bill McKechnie was banished by Umpire George Barr for protesting Derringer's being called out at the plate, and garnered six more in the next three frames.

Frank McCormick, Reds' sensational first sacker, led the attack with five hits in six times up.

Archibald to Meet Dupre Next Monday.

Joey Archibald, conquerer of Mike Belloise in his last appearance here, will meet Tony Dupre in the feature bout on next Monday night's card, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn announced last night.

Dempsey's Protege Makes Good Before Washington Fans

Pittsburgh Boy Counted Out on Face

By Lewis F. Atchison.

With one paralyzing right hand punch that might have jarred an elephant loose from his tusks—and then again might not, Bill Boyd, newest hope on the heavyweight horizon, chilled Billy Nichy, of Pittsburgh, in the second round of their scheduled 10-round bout last night at Griffith Stadium.

An audience of 3,500 fans saw the 176-pound Pittsburgh ringman fall then again might not—Bill Boyd, whipped over the finishing punches. The crowd leaped to its collective feet with a deep-throated roar. Half the customers cheered Boyd, and the other half bawled, "He took a dive," and pinched their noses for emphasis.

A "Throwback" Round.

Up until the juncture where Nichy toppled face-forward like a dynamited smokestack he had the best of the milling—and milling is the word for it. That second round was a throwback to Dempsey's epic brawl with Louis Firpo, Wild Bull of the Pampas. It was electric, heavily laden with excitement born of street brawl battle that must have carried Dempsey back to the hot summer night in 1923 when he conquered the bull-like Firpo.

Boyd, who is Jack Dempsey's fistic find, exhibited some of the old champion's characterics last night. He fought back when stung and fought hard. He took punches to get one in and his blows were of a highly persuasive nature. He batted well from either side, but his left hook was strikingly similar to Dempsey's. It whirled around like Lefty Gomez's curve and exploded on Nichy's body like a grenade.

Nichy Starts Well.

Nichy boxed nicely in the opening round as Boyd walked out and waded into him, eager for the kill. The former Navy heavyweight titleholder bulled Nichy into a neutral corner and began pumping lefts to the face while Nichy tried to edge out of difficulty. The Pittsburgh veteran exhibited a surprising willingness to mingle with the gob and shot four rights to the head that stung Boyd. But the latter took everything that came his way and continued to walk in, firing away at the bobbing figure before him.

Nichy surprised in the second by bounding out of his corner like a hungry bulldog after a lamb chop and before the tinkle of the bell had died away walloped Boyd with both hands to the head. Boyd blinked in amazement, then stepped into the combat with a look of sheer joy.

Stand Toe-to-Toe.

They stood toe-to-toe and worked both hands like a windmill in a hurricane. Blood trickled from a nasty gash over Boyd's left eye, and the red streak of a small cut over Nichy's left optic began to peep through a heavy coat of vaseline. Nichy gave ground first, and Boyd followed him, shooting left hooks and straight, short rights to the head.

Nichy snuggled up to Dempsey's semibald pupil, buried his head on a sweaty shoulder and started punching to the body. The crowd screamed for a knockout. Nichy drove two uppercuts to the head, stinging Boyd, but it only inspired the former Navy champion to greater efforts. He whipped three left hooks to the body, clubbed another right to the head, then spun Nichy around. He hooked him in the body with the left, then cracked the finishing right on the tip of his chin and Nichy collapsed like a European government.

Boyd had a decided pull in weight, coming in at 189¼ pounds, but didn't rely on his weight as much as the dynamite in his padded fists. He exhibited a good left hand, hooking and jabbing, and a better-than-average right which he used sparingly as if reserving it for some special occasion.

Bob Wilson Wins.

Paul Lee, 126, outpointed Ray Ingram, 128¾, in the night's finale—which followed the main bout. Lee took all of the eight rounds which consisted mostly of bouncing around, exaggerated feinting and clinching. Lee cornered Ingram near the end of the seventh in Ingram's corner and hit him with everything in the book, but Ray was fighting back at the bell.

Bupp staggered Wilson with three hard rights under the heart in the third, but Bob shook off the effects and came on to win going away. He staggered Bupp in the fourth with left hooks to the head, and again in the sixth with a sizzling right to the pit of the stomach. Bupp was tough and seemed fresh at the finish.

Angelo Puglisi, 162, outpointed Red Lewis, 167¼, in a slow 6-rounder. Puglisi looked bad against Lewis clowning tactics, but landed enough rights to the body to win handily.

Everett Stops Foe.

Buck Everett repeated his technical knockout victory over Murray Kanner, whom he stopped in two rounds last winter, stopping him again after 1 minute 35 seconds of the fifth round. It was supposed to go eight.

Kanner was in no condition to continue, although visibly through for the evening. He was as helpless as a baby as Everett pounded him from post to post, vainly trying to finish him. Kanner, to his credit, took everything Buck had, but sooner or later Everett would have felled him with a right-hand shot.

Buck, however, was tiring rapidly from driving the big fellow around, and probably welcomed Referee Ray Bowen's intervention as much as the loser.

Richmond Wins.

Ransom Tops Western Golf

Pro's Daughter Scores 76 to Win Medal.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—Barbara Ransom, of Stockton, Calif., a sturdy, bespectacled daughter of a golfing professional, threw a tremendous scare into Patty Berg of Minneapolis, No. 1 feminine shooter of 1938, and other ranking stars in the women's Western golf championship tournament at Olympia Fields Country Club today.

The California miss, playing the best game of her career, streaked around the No. 4 course with a pair of 38's for a 76, three under woman's par, to win medal honors in the qualifying test. Her performance set a new competitive record for women over the course and was only one stroke over the all-time medal mark of 75 set by Mrs. Opal S. Hill of Kansas City, at St. Paul last year.

The new medalist is no stranger to competitive golf. She went to the third round of the National tournament last year, and was a quarter-finalist in the women's Western in 1934 at Los Angeles. She's 5½ feet tall and weighs 125 pounds, and is an exceptionally long driver.

The low 32 scorers among the 124 starters today qualified for the match play championship flight starting tomorrow. Eighteen hole matches will be played daily until Saturday, when the two finalists will play 36 holes for the championship.

Fractured Finger Suffered by Rogell

Detroit, Aug. 22 (AP).—Bill Rogell, veteran shortstop of the Detroit Tigers, remained at home tonight when the club departed on its final Eastern trip of the year because of a fractured finger suffered in Sunday's game here against the St. Louis Browns.

Durham Nosed Out.

Ear Still Bothers Vander Meer.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 22 (AP).—Johnny Vander Meer, ace Cincinnati Reds pitcher, suffered a recurrence of an ear infection today and reported he was in intense pain.

After a visit to his physician today, it was indicated that it might be several weeks before he would take his place on the mound again. He will be placed under a doctor's care when he returns with the team to Cincinnati tomorrow, Manager Bill McKechnie reported.

Hubbell May Be Back Near End of Season

By the Associated Press.

A routine hospital report said the long-time big gun of the New York Giants' pitching artillery was "getting along fine" but Operating Surgeon J. Spencer Speed declined to predict the ultimate result.

Dr. Speed said "a loose body"—chip of bone—was removed and explained that Hubbell was undergoing a natural reaction from the general anesthetic and would not be able to see anyone for 24 hours.

After the x-ray examination Saturday revealed the loose body, the surgeon said the operation "should improve" the effectiveness of the pitcher's arm. He accorded Hubbell "a chance" of returning to the game before the season's end.

Hubbell was forced out of action last Thursday when he lost his tenth game of the season, after having won 13. Ineffective against the Brooklyn Dodgers for five innings, he told Manager Bill Terry every pitch was accompanied by severe pain.

The king of the southpaws disclosed he had arm soreness during the 1936 and 1937 campaigns and Gus Mancuso, catcher, came forward with the information that he often had noticed Hubbell wince after throwing his screwball.

Mancuso said he would walk to the mound and ask Hubbell about the arm but the slender, quiet, uncomplaining fellow would deny his arm hurt.

Philadelphia, Aug. 22 (AP).—There's still three months before the opening of the basketball season, but H. Gabriel Murphy, president of the Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball Conference, has wasted no time in arranging next year's schedule.

He announced the complete schedule of 30 games today. West Virginia and Carnegie Tech meet at Pittsburgh in the first game on January 7, while on January 9 the championship Temple quintet encounters Georgetown at Washington.

The schedule:

Chiozza Retired.

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Second Baseman Lou Chiozza, victim of a dislocated shoulder, will be placed on the voluntary retired list by the New York Giants. Chiozza is in Memphis getting treatments. The Giants have recalled Pitcher Hy Vandenberg, who has been out with a broken foot.

Irwin Injury Not Serious

Redskin Star's Shoulder Is Only Bruised.

Until Wednesday when the 'Skins go through another vigorous scrimmage, the recruits will be out of the way of the axe. But then Flaherty must again swing the cutlet and dispose of about eight more newcomers or veterans as the case may be.

Justice, who at first was believed seriously hurt, has nothing more than a bruised shoulder which will keep him out of action for two or three days, X-rays revealed.

Baugh and Irwin were not hurt badly and will get back to the grind today.

Bob Masterson, the sensational end, received a bump on the knee yesterday while going through calisthenics. However, the injury was only slight and he will be ready to go again today.

Hot Browns Here Today

Nats Open Home Stay; Leonard to Pitch.

Home, no more to roam for 10 days, the Nats renew their battle for a first-division berth today when they meet the St. Louis Browns in the opener of a two-game series.

The Browns, during the past three weeks, have been playing the best ball in the league with the exception of the Yankees and, aided by Buck Newsom's six straight victories, climbed out of eighth place.

The Nats, threatened with the loss of their first division berth by the Tigers, who are only a half game distant in fifth place, today are expected to send Dutch Leonard to the mound against the Browns.

Buddy Lewis' return to his fielding form has put an end to reports that he would be benched in favor of Ossie Bluege. During the three games at Boston, Lewis played errorless ball.

Clark Griffith's plan to bring Bobby Estallela to Washington from Charlotte for another trial with the Nats has now been abandoned. Estallela, who is the Piedmont League's leading batter and home run slugger, suffered a broken jaw when struck by a fungo bat in practice and is out for the season. It had been Griffith's plan to play Estallela in the Nats' outfield after the Charlotte club's season closed early in September.

Pat Deck Winner.

Patrick A. Deck won the Fairlawn singles closed tennis tournament yesterday afternoon on the Fairlawn courts. He defeated Billy Contreras in five gruelling sets at 7—5, 3—6, 9—7, 4—6, 6—2.

Sam Snead Crushes Cooper To Win Canadian Open Title

By the United Press.

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 22.—Slammin' Sam Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., cleaved seven strokes off par for 27 holes today to dethrone Lighthorse Harry Cooper, of Chicago, as Canadian Open Golf champion.

Cooper and Snead tied with 277's after 72 holes of medal play on Saturday, were deadlocked with five under par 67's after today's 18-hole playoff, necessitating an extra nine holes where the West Virginian continued his par shattering to win the $1,000 first prize.

Snead took the last nine holes in two under par 34 to win the title by five strokes from Cooper who blew up and went three over regular figures for a 39. Today's 27 holes left Sammy 18 strokes under par for the 99 holes he needed to win while Cooper was 13 under for the same distance. Cooper took second money of $600.

Slammin' Sam, leading money winner of the pro brigade, had one eagle, nine birdies, 14 pars, and was over par but four times today as he crushed the Chicagoan.

It took an eagle 3 on the 535-yard twelfth hole to bring Snead through the first 18 all square. Sammy sent a long second shot booming to the green, then sank a 30-foot putt to gain a stroke on Cooper's birdie 4 on the same hole.

It was the first time in history of the tournament that players deadlocked after the regulation 72 holes had played to a second tie, and it took a hurried meeting of the committee with the principals to decide upon the extra 9 holes.

Snead went ahead on the nineteenth with a birdie 3, but they halved the twentieth as both took one over regulation fives.

They divided the twenty-first in par figures, but Snead gained another stroke when Cooper slipped one over the par-4 on the twenty-second. He went three strokes ahead with a birdie 4 on the twenty-third, then after dividing the next three Snead clinched the match with another birdie on the par-4 twenty-seventh where Cooper needed a 5.

Slattery, Former Ring Champ, Lacks $5 Fine in D. C. Court

Jimmy Slattery, former light heavyweight boxing champion of the world, was again brought into the limelight yesterday when he appeared in Police Court here and was unable to pay a $5 fine on a minor charge.

Released after sympathetic newsmen had paid his fine, Slattery said he had been "bumming around" most of the time since he lost the title bout to Maxie Rosenbloom in Madison Square Garden in 1929.

"I fought a few small bouts after I lost the title," the former champ told a Post reporter, "and then I just seemed to slip down and down. I worked for the WPA in New York for about six months and then I got jobs in restaurants and cafes as a bartender.

"I guess my rapid descent was just fate," the man who at one time grossed more than $85,000 on one fight said, "the fight racket is some game."

Slattery, who stands about six feet and appears in the best of condition, declared he would never enter the ring again. During his brief career of about seven years, he took in approximately $600,000 as his share of box office receipts.

"No, I don't know just what I will do now," he said, "but I'm definitely through with boxing. You know a man can't stay in the fight racket long and expect to keep on top."

Marlboro Installs Photo-Finish Equipment for First Time

Bill Ackerman on Fishing

The best bet again this week is Ocean City, for the easterly of last Friday schooled the marlin to the extent that on Sunday 15 were brought in, nine at Magee's Dock alone.

ACKERMAN.

The highlight of the day, however, was the catch of a 53-pound sailfish by Capt. Jim Whaley on his Empries III. The first large one ever caught in this section on hook and line.

Close behind, with a catch that would be rated more of an oddity, was that of Capt. Chester Gray on the Hilda. A large marlin with a 10-inch sailfish stuck in its gills. Needless to say, it is being mounted as caught.

The marlin in this run are larger than they have been at any time during the season—running up to nearly 100 pounds. On Saturday Capt. Ley Raymond had three and a large tuna, and two on Sunday, although two more rods were broken in their taking. Capt. Leo Droughton on the Sampan caught four marlin, Capt. Raymond Savage, one, while Capt. Paul Mumford on his Miss Ocean City had four large tuna.

Casters, fishing the beaches below Ocean City should keep a weather eye open for wild hogs, if all trips are like that of "Eggie" Henry's on Sunday, which was spoiled by the "tuskers" on the Levels when they chased the party while fishing in order to purloin the catch, and not satisfied with that, charging the campfire to get the lunch.

The week-end's fishing in the upper bay was rated very much on just how lucky the individual anglers happened to be—whether or not they were sitting on the right spot when the fish raised.

And, there was not the slightest "rhyme or reason" in their raising. Sometimes the short distance of a mere half-mile was the difference between a good catch and, not even a scale.

The school of blues and stripers that have been raising from Plum Point to Cedarhurst, intrigued our fancy to the extent that we fished them at daylight, and again in the evening—saw boats pulling them in, as well as many nice taches coming into the docks. It took two days, however, and four unproductive trips, to find the trick—a spreader and some 5 pounds of lead (a la Spriggs) on heavy handlines. Alright if you are fishing for the market, or even if it is used to find the fish, but it certainly isn't to be classed as sport. It is hard to say just how heavy a rod would be necessary to hold such a rig.

In spite of the fact, that on one evening the big rock were schooled and on top from West River to Baltimore Light—a distance of 20 miles—Capt. Bob Lee says this past week has been the poorest of the whole season.

He followed the nets all last week, as we did over the week-end, in search of alewives for chumming the bluefish. It is impossible to obtain, for those in the upper bay are so small they go right through the three-inch mesh of the pounds. Neither are they to be had from 'Woodfield at Galesville.

Instead we got a supply of live shrimp from Ralph Lee and chummed for rock off the northwest buoy at Holland Point through the heat of the day. Hardheads were the sole reward of our efforts, but not so bad as it sounds, for they were real sport taken on unweighted lines near the top. We saw but few rocks raise—small bunches, mostly early morning and just before dark, but also occasionally during the day.

Nearly all the final arrangements for the Chesapeake Bay Fishing Fair next Saturday and Sunday, August 27 and 28, at Rock Hall are virtually complete. It promises to be the largest group of anglers ever gathered together at one time, to start fishing at dawn on the morning of the 27th at the sound of six shots from the Coast Guard cutter Calypso and to continue (if they choose) until noon the following day.

Thirty-six hours of fishing in the upper bay for big fish that will take the hansome trophies and valuable prizes awaiting an estimated 3,000 anglers from every section of the east for this third annual fair.

Special attention this year is being given to the social side so the ladies will not find the going to dull if they don't care for fishing. There will be two plank dances, a fish fry, a crab feast, a tour of historical Kent County, boat parades and other events that will add to their enjoyment, if it doesn't to that of the men.

One of the most widely read fishing writers in the East, Johnnie Mock, of the Pittsburgh Press, is expected to arrive with a special train made up of Pittsburgh anglers, who found the previous fairs so intriguing, they are coming back again this year.

Bill Gary, Skip Bly, Pete Davis, and Joe Reith, fishing with Capt. Bill Murphy out of Governors Run last week, not only had a swell catch of hardheads, but they ran into some exceptionally nice trout, the largest of which was close on to six pounds.

Bond Brings 8 Horses to Nearby Meet

Sure Miss to Compete; 10-Day Session to Open Tomorrow.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Marlboro, Md., Aug. 22.—Sure Miss, which won a recent race and paid $100.90, is one of eight horses that Trainer J. Bowes Bond will campaign for various owners during the Southern Maryland Agricultural Fair Association's 10-day session, beginning Wednesday.

Bond, one of the best of the State's younger generation of trainers, scored a triple recently. After Sure Miss won the opener, Bond came back and won the feature race with Dark Revue. Two races later he captured another purse with Penway. In between these victories, Bond's Inactive was third to Bromide and Ruth Lerner. Inactive would have been Bond's fourth winner of the day, but for Jockey Sammy Palumbo being blocked as he made his bid on the inside leaving the backstretch.

Improvements Listed.

During the past ten weeks the Marlboro plant has been remodeled. The racing strip is in tip-top condition. 102 new stalls have been built, free parking space has been increased, lighting and drainage systems bettered, the electrical camera, to photograph all finishes, installed in a booth atop the grandstand, new quarters for the stewards built alongside the cameramen, a new road into the track has been made, all lawns graded, rest rooms for both sexes installed, new saliva barn erected, wherein Dr. Thomas A. Ladson, of the Maryland Racing Commission, can test all winners; concrete walks laid from the grandstand to paddock and a concrete flooring laid beneath the parimutuel department, making the plant in Southern Maryland one of the best half-mile courses.

Camera Installed.

The electrical camera will be used here for the first time during this meeting. It is the same machine that is used at the majority of Eastern mile tracks. Jimmy Jones, its inventor, says that his camera will develop pictures in one minute, which will later be shown on a projector placed in the parimutuel ring.

Post time for the first race has been set at 2 p. m. Seven races will be run daily. Edward S. Welter will be in the starter's stand, a position he has held for years.

The daily double will be on the first and second races.

Procurement Nine Winner

With Preston pitching eight-hit ball, Procurement won the first game in the city-wide Baseball Federation League, the winner of which will go to Pittsburgh to compete in the national tournament.

Procurement efeated Fort Belvoir, 4-2, yesterday on the South Ellipse. Jones paced Procurement's attack with a home run and single.

Tunica, Favorite, Chicago Winner

Chicago, Aug. 22 (AP).—Tunica, claimed for $1,000 less than three months ago, raced to its fourth win for Owner Joe Desopo, of Louisville, Ky., by taking Washington Park's healiner today, the Dolton Handicap at a mile and 70 yards.

Tunica finished a head in front of Xenomay, an outsider, with Bomber third. Jockey George South had Tunica in sixth place most of the way, before he took his mount outside and around the field at the head of the stretch. Tunica had just enough left to stand off Xenomay's rousing challenge.

Tunica, the favorite in the betting, ran the distance in 1:43 3-5 over a good track and paid $6.20.

Marica Wins In Mile Test At Saratoga

By the Associated Press.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 22. Marica, the coal-black, 5-year-old mare which has been sweeping everything before her, today won her fourth purse in as many 1938 starts when she easily defeated three rivals of her sex in the 1 mile Candida Handicap. Tom Taggart's daughter of Epinard-Canberra showed New Yorkers how she earned her big reputation by conceding many pounds and scoring in easy fashion, two lengths better than B. F. Christmas' Idle Miss. Louie Strube's Rust was third, beaten another four lengths, while Mrs. H. C. Phipps' Bransome brought up the rear.

Marica, favorite at 13 to 20, breezed home in 1:38 flat under 128 pounds, which included Johnny Gilbert. Idle Miss, winner of the Matron Handicap at Arlington Park among other conquests, carried 112 pounds; Rust, 109, and Bransome, the 3-year-old "baby" of the field, 104.

This ovrenight handicap topped the program that ushered in the final week of the spa season. Rain fell overnight but, while the track was on the "dead" side, it had dried out under a hot sun.

Marica began the current year with two triumphs at Delaware. She scored again at Narragansett, all of her victories being registered in handicaps. She is Esposa's only rival for the championship among the mares. Unfortunately, Marica was not nominated for any of the local stakes. She beat Esposa in the spring, but Esposa at that time had not reached the form she has shown this month.

Bransome was allowed to steal a long early lead while Gilbert bided his time astride Marica. The latter was under wraps while vying for the second place with Idle Miss. Around the bend, Marica began her winning charge. She ran past Bransome and entered the stretch going easily and Daylight in front. Bransome stopped as Idle Miss made a futile bid. Marica widened her advance through the last furlong.

Budge and Mako Advance With Ease in National Doubles

In This Corner

By Jack Cuddy.

New York, Aug. 22.—Roofin' the boys home.

A certain cereal company is spending $1,000,000 to unearth the 'most popular' nine-man line-up in all baseball. Every player who is elected to this all-America popularity team gets a shiny new sedan in recognition of his popularity—also for his contributions to the national pastime.

JACK CUDDY.

This particular cereal company really is going to town in this contest. You can read its great big ads in almost in any newspaper you pick up. And almost every time you try to tune in on the radio and pick up a bit of swing, you'll hear somebody talking about it.

Maybe I'm wrong, but from personal contact I figure this is the greatest poll conducted in our fair land since the late and lamented Literary Digest held its national poll which proved conclusively that Alf Landon would beat Franklin Roosevelt in the last election.

• • • •

Thus far in the voting we have had Lou Gehrig of the Yankees elected to first base, Charley Gehringer of Detroit's Tigers to second sack, Mel Ott of the New York Giants to the hot corner, and Joe Cronin, player-manager of Boston's Red Sox as short stop.

This cereal company was smart. It launched no poll for the most able of ball players. Had it done that our vast land might be torn with civil strife. But "popularity" and "ability" are cocktails with an entirely different base.

If you think about this popularity in baseball, look over some of the ballots which the cereal company has received.

For example, here's a guy who votes for Frank McCormick of the Cincinnati Reds for the first-basing job. He pens:

His near .350 batting pace;
As tho 'twere Sisler out there still."

Another guy votes for Lou Gehrig for the first-base job because, "I like him because he thinks fast when he pitches." My basevoting friend must have Ol' Rawhide confused with Lefty Gomez or Diz Dean, either of whom could have posed for Rodin's "Thinker."

Another ballot says, "I like Lou Gehrig because whenever I bet on his team he wins and I win money." There is a guy who is smart. He is the typical American, always figuring in dollars and doughnuts.

• • • •

The next ballot must have come from the North Carolina hills. It says, "I like Babe Ruth for first base because he is a leading baseball star. He is a good player, and a hero. As Ruth goes, so goes the Yankees." Certainly no radio ever reached this Rip Van Winkle.

The southpaws have their say: "I like Hank Greenberg because he's left-handed."

The fact that misery loves company is reflected in this: "I like Jimmy Foxx because he has sinus trouble and so do I. And I know how much it must torture him."

Another guy votes: "I like Bill Terry because his home is in Memphis." The New York Giants have sent out a posse to collect this chap. They want to put him on exhibition as "the vanishing American who likes Terry." He will have a very nice job in New York until someone ties a knot under his left ear.

The votes go on and on—millions of them. The men who read and count them are being carted off to cool sanitariums, shouting, "such popularity must be preserved."

International Net Stars to Compete.

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Leading women tennis players of the United States and Australia will compete in team matches on Long Island this week-end. They will play four singles and two doubles on Saturday at the Meadow Club, Southampton, N. Y., and stage the same program Sunday at the Maidstone Club, East Hampton, N. Y.

The Australian team will consist of Nancy Wynne, finalist against Alice Marble, at Manchester, Mass., last Saturday; Thelma Coyne, Mrs. Harry C. Hopman, wife of the Davis Cup Team captain, and Dorothy Stevenson. They are ranked at No. 1, No. 2, No. 5 and No. 6, respectively, in Australia. All four will compete in the National Singles at Forest Hills September 8 to 17.

The United States team will be selected from a group of seven players: Miss Marble, Helen Jacobs, Dorothy May Bundy, Mrs. Marjorie Gladman Van Ryn, Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, Barbara Winslow and Virginia Wolfenden. Miss Marble, Miss Jacobs, Miss Bundy and Mrs. Van Ryn hold the top four places in the Nation's first ten, while Mrs. Fabyan is ranked sixth and Miss Winslow eleventh.

Bromwich, Quist Take 3-Set Match

By the Associated Press.

Brookline, Mass., Aug 22.—One of the largest foreign delegations in the 57 years of national doubles tennis competition was halved during today's opening play, which saw the future Davis Cup rivals, Don Budge and Gene Mako, of the United States, and Adrian Quist and Jack Bromwich, of Australia, advance with one-sided victories.

Ten of the 32 pairs entered were foreign teams and half of them were eliminated during the first-round play, 2 because of defaults.

Henner Henkel, a winner here last year with the imprisoned Baron Gottried von Cramm, and his new German Davis Cup teammate, George von Metaxa, were ordered to withdraw by their home tennis association. The same cablegram also prevented their team's spare player, Rolf Gopfert, from teaming with Jacques Brugnon, the French veteran.

German Defaulted.

Although the three German players said they intend to remain in this country for an indefinite period, they were defaulted by their non-playing captain, Frederick C. Uhl, who saw them drop every set in five matches against Quist and Bromwich here in last week's interzone Davis Cup final.

The other foreign pairs to drop out were Tamio Abe and Fumitera Nakano, of Japan, who were beaten, 6—3, 6—4, 10—12, 6—4, by Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, and Bryan Grant, of Atlanta; the Japanese-Australian combination of Yasumine Kuramitsu and Mervyn Weston, which was eliminated, 6—2, 6—3, 6—4, by Wilmer Allison and Johnny Van Ryn, of Austin, Tex., and England's Eric J. Filby and Roland A. Shayes, who bowed to Gardner Mulloy, of Miami, and George Foley, of Los Angeles, 6—2, 3—6, 7—5, 3—6, 6—4.

Upholding their top seedings on the domestic and foreign lists respectively in the approved style, Budge and Mako swept through Marvin Wachman, of Milwaukee, and Norbert Burgess, of Chicago, 6—3, 6—1, 6—3, while Quist and Bromwich were just a bit more impressive overwhelming the California pair of Morimer Ballagh and Verne Hughes, 6—2, 6—2, 6—2.

Kovac-Harman Bow.

The only seeded team to be beaten on the men's list was the fourth-ranking Oakland, Calif., entry, Frank Kovacs and Robert Harman. They were spotted a set by Gilbert Hunt, of Washington, and Ernest Sutter, of New Orleans, but were beaten, 2—6, 6—1, 6—3, 6—4.

What threatened to result in a startling upset was barely averted by the second-seeded domestic team of Joe Hunt, of Los Angeles, and Sydney Wood, of New York. Those stars had match point against them in the ninth game of their fifth and final set against Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, and Frank Parker, Beverly Hills, Calif., before they rallied and pulled out a 6—3, 6—2, 2—6, 3—6, 9—7 triumph. This heart - stirring battle was squared when Parker's 40-15 lead on service was overcome in the ninth game, and was won after Van Horn was cracked in the fifteenth.

Men's First Round.

Armstrong's Title Monopoly Hurting Game, Tunney Says

By the Associated Press.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 22.—Henry Armstrong's monopoly on three boxing titles is hurting the sport and public interest in the fight game is low, Gene Tunney, former heavyweight champion, said here today.

"William Muldoon was exactly right when he refused to let a champion of one class challenge the champion of a class above without first proving himself in that class and relinquishing his title in the lower division," Tunney said.

Muldoon, for many years chairman of the New York State Boxing Commission, died in his ninetieth year after ruling as virtual czar of boxing in the United States.

With Armstrong holding the featherweight, lightweight and welterweight titles, interest in the two lower divisions, "is dead," Tunney contended.

"And unless a young, upright challenger is developed to meet Joe Louis within the next year the interest in the heavyweight division will be dead as well," he said.

"With five of the seven major boxing championships held by colored fighters (Armstrong, Louis and John Henry Lewis, light heavy) the interest in the fighting sport is at low ebb. It is time to develop new contenders for the sake of public interest."

The fighter who beats Louis, Tunney predicted, will be "a good boxer. The man doesn't live who can stick around to win the fight after absorbing a couple of Louis' punches on the jaw."

'Golf Unknowns' Pace Public Links Tourney

Furgol, Unemployed Youth and Doll, Shopworker, Shoot 68s; McCormick, 1937 Champ, Has 70; Gipe, of D. C., Has 73.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 22.—Two of golf's great army of "extras," an unemployed youth from New York, and a shopworker from Kentucky, blazed their way to starring roles today in the sports' annual big show for the working man—the National Public Links championship.

Scoring brilliant, two-under-par rounds of 68 each, Edward Furgol, of Utica, N. Y., and Pete Doll, of Louisville, Ky., set the pace for the first 18 holes of a two-day, 36-hole qualifying test which, Wednesday morning, will send 64 players into match play.

"Unknowns," both, and just two other players in the large field this morning, they uncorked games which shaded those of more-highly regarded entries.

The defending champion and favorite, husky Bruce McCormick, Los Angeles fireman, and Andrew Szwedko, Pittsburgh steel mill worker, were bracketed in second place at 70, well ahead of most of a field which had trouble all day with the tricky, rolling Highland Park courses.

Played "Old" Course.

Furgol, 20-year-old blond Polish-American boy, and Doll, a veteran of 10 years of caddying and playing between tricks in a Louisville plumbing manufacturing company, both played the "old" par 70 course, as did McCormick. Szwedko turned in his 70 on the "new" and more difficult 18 of par 71 and was a highly-regarded "dark horse."

A metal polisher by trade, Furgol gave par a neat "buffing" with a 34-34 performance studded with four birdies. He was even par out and 2 under coming home. Doll went out in 32 for the best nine of the day and came home in the regulation 36 strokes, having nine consecutive fours on the homeward trip.

Wes Berner, college student from Portland, Ore.; Michael Cestone, of Newark, N. J.; Marshall Carlson, of Toledo, Ohio, and Don Erickson, the runner-up at San Francisco last year, all had 71's. In the 72 bracket were Fred Gronauer, Indianapolis; Alex Danko, William Birofka, Elizabeth, N. J.; Loio Palenapa, Honolulu; Lloyd Nordstrom, Davenport, Iowa; Al Leach, East Cleveland, Ohio; Chase Fannon, Chicago, and Walter Burkemo, Detroit.

Los Angeles Leads Teams.

Los Angeles' four-man team of Erickson, George Lance, McCormick and Neil Whitney, with a total of 294 strokes, took the leadership in the battle for the Harding Trophy, awarded the quartet having low gross for the 36-hole qualifying distance. A stroke back was the Utica (N. Y.) team with Louisville third and Pittsburgh fourth at 296 and 297, respectively. Sacramento, defending team champion and holders of the record at 587 strokes, was far back at 309.

All players switch courses tomorrow. Those who played the old course today were expected to encounter trouble on the new layout, longer by 391 yards and strewn with hazards.

James Gipe, 35-38—73.
Andrew Oliveri, 36-44—80.
Bradley Burrows, 43-47—80.
Bob Morris, 45-41—86.

Boy, 15, Wins Gun Title, Collapses.

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 22 (AP).—Rudy Etchen, 15-year-old Wichita, Kans., youth, collapsed on the traps at the grand American trapshoot today, shortly after breaking 98 to 100 targets to win the National Junior championship, and was ordered to bed.

The boy's father, Fred Etchen, said Rudy had suffered all night with a slight attack of ptomaine poisoning, but that he insisted on firing in the 100-target junior meet. The boy won the sub-junior title the last two years, and captured the Kansas State championship this year, the youngest ever to win a State crown.

Dr. Pepper Ten Winner

Rosenfield Gives 2 Hits in 6-0 Triumph.

Behind the two-hit pitching of Abe Rosenfield, the Dr. Pepper ten, champions of the Community Center and Dixie night leagues, defeated the Carr Brothers and Boswell aggregation, 6-0, in the first round of the Metropolitan Softball tournament playoffs yesterday at Eastern Stadium.

While Rosenfield, long regarded as one of Washington's best softball pitchers, was holding the Prince Georges County nine in check, his teammates collected seven bingles off the offerings of Douglas McLaren, Carr Brothers and Boswell ace.

Dr. Pepper scored three times in the second inning with the aid of some costly errors by Shortstop Temple Jarrell and McLaren. Jarrell let Phil Fox's slow grounder roll through his legs to permit a runner to cross the plate while McLaren's muff of Claude Hill's easy pop fly allowed another tally to score.

The soft drink boys added three more runs in the sixth frame to make the game safe. Once again errors played an important part, as Jarrell made a wild throw to the plate to give Dr. Pepper its fourth unearned run.

3 Trapshoot Records Fall At Vandalia

13-Year-Old Boy Takes Title in $38 Grand American Event.

By the Associated Press.

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 22.—Blazing shotguns fired three new records into the clay target books today as the thirty-ninth annual Grand American trapshoot program opened at the permanent home of the Amateur Trapshooting Association here along the banks of the Miami.

Five championships, one captured by a 13-year-old schoolboy from Missouri and another by a 67-year-old plumbing and heating contractor from Florida, were decided in the sensational opening program.

Professionals registered two of the records, both world affairs, but Ohio's farmboy amateur, Joe Hiestand, from Hillsboro, was the big sensation. Joe, shorn of seven national titles a year ago, came back by cracking 200 in a row today, running his unbroken string for the last three days to 500. He had a "carryover" of 66 from the Yorklyn, Del., meet of two weeks ago, giving him a run of 566.

500 Straight Mark.

The 500 straight set a new record for the fixture. Two years ago Hale Jones, of Woodriver, Ill., broke 487 in a row for the "tops," but Hiestand eclipsed that today. The 566 leaves him but 19 targets from the all-time amateur world long run of 585 set two years ago by Walter Beaver, of Conshohocken, Pa.

Fred Tomlin, professional from Glassboro, N. J., cracked the first 12 today to run his string to 714, the longest run in trapshooting history. He had carried a run of 702 from several Eastern registered meets to the "grand."

The other record was a squad event. Five professionals turned in a combined total of 993 of 1.000 to better the previous mark of 991. The amateur mark is 900. The world-champion squad, with the scores: Capt. J. B. Grier, Rockland, Del., 200; Karl Maust, Columbus, Ohio, 199; Joe Davison, Kansas City, Mo., 199; F. H. Woodcock, Ithaca, N. Y., 199; Homer Clark, Alton, Ill., 196.

Boy Wins, Collapses.

Rudy Etchen, 15-year-old youth from Wichita, Kans., the youngest boy ever to win a State championship, surrendered his sub-junior championship because he had outgrown it, but stepped up to the junior class to win with 98 of 100. Shortly after winning, Etchen collapsed on the traps as the result of an attack of ptomaine poisoning. He took a nap of several hours and then came back for the State champion race, but missed three in a row after breaking the first 20.

The senior title, for shooters over 65, went to 67-year-old E. E. Bush, plumbing and heating contractor from Tallahassee, Fla., who cracked 192 of 200. He said he started shooting 15 years ago, and would have been at it before but for the fact that he "had no dough."

Mr. and Mrs. John Sanders, of Keyser, W. Va., grabbed the husband-wife event for the second time in four years, Sanders breaking 191 of 200 and "Bunny" getting 168.

Oliver and Douglas Shoot a Record 63, Retain Pro-Am Title

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A Staff Correspondent.

Lancaster, Pa., Aug. 22.—Ed Oliver, the husky Wilmington, Del., professional, and his young partner, Dave Douglas, successfully defended their Lancaster Country Club pro-amateur laurels here today with a 9-under par best ball of 63, four shots ahead of the four teams that tied for second with 67s. A field of 69 teams and 51 professionals competed.

Lewis Worsham, jr., Chevy Chase Club, of Washington, assistant professional, and big Ed Dudley, '37 Ryder Cup team captain, tied in the pro sweepstakes, the event that Dudley won last year, with 4 under par 68s, each pairing nines of 34.

The leading pros in this section, Baltimore, Washington, and Rut Coffey and Al Houghton, of Virginia, competed in the tournament. Handsome Henry Picard, of Hershey; Sam Byrd, Philadelphia; Gene Kunes, former Canadian open champion, and Dudley Felix Serafin, Scranton; Terl Johnson, Norristown, and Dudley were some of the bigger "name" pros who played in the event sponsored by Arthur B. Thorn, former Woodmont pro.

The deadlock for second place included two teams from Washington, Worsham and Maury Fitzgerald, Kenwood, and George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, and Bobby Brownell, Manor. The others were Gene Kunes and H. R. Peck, Norristown; Rut Coffey and Paul Bennett, Winchester, and Marty Lyons and G. Jones, Philadelphia.

Identical Cards.

The duos that tied for second had identical cards of 33-34, 3 under par for the tougher outgoing nine and 2 under coming in. Fitzgerald helped Worsham on one hole, the sixth, where he holed a putt for a birdie 2, while Brownell and Diffenbaugh paired well, Brownell scoring a 74, while the Kenwood mentor returned no card, but had an approximate 73.

Oliver, who finished fourth in the Canadian open last week; Picard, Masters open champion, and Harlan Wills, former District public links star and now pro at the Media Heights C. C., near here, tied for second in the pro sweepstakes, all with 69s.

Oliver and Douglas mixed 10 birdies in their record round, and when their score of 63 was turned in early in the afternoon it was apparent that the remainder of the field was shooting for the runner-up prize.

J. Leeman, hometown professional fromthe Overlook C. C., treated the gallery around the short sixth hole to an unexpected thrill when he scored a hole-in-one. Bobby Brownell had one of several eagles scored in the day when he dropped his niblick shot on the second hole for a two. Ed Dudley eagled the ninth with two fine wood shots and a 15-foot putt.

Bags Six Birdies.

Worsham mixed six birdies in his 68 that was the sensation as few in the gallery of nearly 1,000 that tramped the course knew of the promising youngster from Chevy Chase. He was over par in the first and fourth holes where his tee shots mixed with trees, but on 2, 5, 7, 9, 10 and 18 he snared birdies. Worsham left for Lake Placid, where he will play in the $3,000 open starting Thursday.

Oliver received $120 for his winning pro-amateur performance, while Worsham, tying for second in the program and tying in the prosweeps, won $60.

The 68 bracket, a stroke out of the money in the pro-am, included three teams from the Middle Atlantic sector, the Greiner brothers, Andy Gibson and Edgar Lucas, Baltimore; Johnny Bass and Ned Frame and Will and Dudley, with their partners.

Turner to Offer Battle Royal on Thursday Card

A squadron of five, full-grown pachyderms will be turned loose in the ring Thursday night at Griffith Stadium in the third battle-royal of the summer wrestling season. The last of the group was signed last night as Promoter Joe Turner completed his card.

Wrestling in the featured bout, of course, are Ruby Allen, welterweight titleholder, and Teddy Moran, Boston challenger. Their bout, which is attracting wide interest, is the second between lady athletes ever staged here, and the first promoted at the stadium.

Ed Meske, tall and handsome lad from Ohio State, who has been working in preliminaries of late, heads the list of free-for-all grapplers. Ed Newman, Tor Johnson, 360-pounder who reached the finals of the last one-night tournament; Mike Breman and Red Ryan—a red-headed Irishman, complete the list.

Bibber McCoy, who won the last mass engagement, has been booked with Cliff Olson for the "villain" championship of the city.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 22.—The Chicago White Sox caught up with Bob Feller in the eighth inning today, scored three runs on Mike Kreevich's triple with the bases loaded, and handed the Indians a 4-2 trimming in the fifth and deciding game of the series.

Going into the eighth the Indians were leading, 2-1, and Feller had fanned eight, walked but two and held the Sox to six hits.

Joe Kuhel led off with a single to center, stole second and went to third on Gerald Walker's infield hit. Feller then walked Luke Appling to fill the bases, and Kreevich cleared them a moment later with a terrific clout to deep center field. The Sox had scored their first run in the sixth on Walker's single and a double by Rip Radcliffe.

Rollie Hemsley, Feller's battery mate, took charge of the Indian scoring. He clipped Johnny Whitehead, who went the route for the Sox and gave up nine hits, for a pair of doubles, driving home Lyn Lary with his first two-bagger, in the third, and scoring himself on Jeff Heath's fly and Hal Trosky's single after doubling down the third base line in the sixth.

Feller, like Whitehead, allowed nine hits, five of them for extra bases. Walker, in addition to his two singles, got a double and Kreevich smacked a single and double besides his game-winning three-bagger. Marvin Owen also hit a triple.

Foreign Selling Lowers Cotton

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Cotton was easier today under foreign selling while demand was limited in the absence of a cotton loan terms announcement. December sold off from 8.33 to 8.27 and closed at the low, with final prices 8 to 13 points net lower.

The market opened 6 to 9 points lower in sympathy with declines in foreign market sand under selling from Liverpool and Bombay. Prices responded only partially to the easiness abroad, owing to trade buying, and scattering demand was attracted by complaints of boll weevil activity in the central belt over the week-end. Prices moved narrowly until a little more hedge selling and foreign offers appeared at the close.

Lockheed Aircraft Sets Sales Record

Los Angeles, Aug. 22.—Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Burbank, Calif., for the six months ended June 30, 1938, reports a net profit after taxes and depreciation of $151,074, equivalent to approximately 23 cents a share on the 660,879 shares of common stock outstanding, it was revealed in the semi-annual statement released by Robert E. Gross, president, today.

Sales, including spare parts and special equipment, for the first six months of 1938 reached a new high of $5,111,699, against sales of $2,644,991 in the corresponding period of 1937, an increase of 92 per cent. Deliveries for the six-month period amounted to 59 airplanes.

Wheat Prices React Under Profit-taking

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—The wheat market took another setback today as hedging sales and some profit taking augmented the burden of liquidation absorbed in the pit. Acting very much like it did Saturday, wheat bulged ½ cent at the opening but then dropped about a cent and held for the rest of the session at a net fractional loss.

The reaction Saturday and today from a 5 cents advance last week above recent seasonal lows was described as largely technical by some market experts. Hedging from the Northwest coincident with movement of new grain in the spring wheat belt was exerting a steady pressure on the pit, they said, and little fresh buying support except from mills was in evidence.

They called it a "typical trading market." Many dealers are awaiting more definite information concerning the proposed Government export subsidy program before making further commitments.

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler,
A Special Correspondent.

Dull Trading and Lower Prices Reflect Hot Weather and Declining Commodities.

New York, Aug. 22.—Equities reflected hot weather and depressed commodity price influences, trading on the stock exchange today declining to 396,620 shares, the smallest day's business since June 17, three days before the upswing got under way. All share groups worked a little lower excepting steels, utilities and blue chip manufacturing, where improvement was so small as to be scarcely noticeable.

It was a negative session so far as discernment of trend was concerned. A large part of Wall Street is absent on holidays and in financial quarters, as well as in many business lines, the disposition is to await the deadline represented by Labor Day before worrying too much about what stocks are doing.

Bonds dawdled along with few important changes except in the foreign section, where rise or abatement of war fears was reflected in prices. Dollar exchange was generally lower. Shipments of large sums in gold abroad are continuing, with Belgium releasing a substantial amount today. Wheat lost fractionally, with last prices representing a recovery from the lows. Cotton broke 8 to 13 points on news of favorable weather in the belt.

Steels Anemic.

Resistance of the steel stocks to the downpull of the dull stock market was feeble, considering news that production is about 5 per cent higher this week than last and at the best levels in about ten months. Steel common and Bethlehem, among the day's most active issues, moved in opposite directions, the former losing a quarter point and the latter gaining 1½. Observers are generally of the opinion that even with a further rise in output, above the current rate of 42.8 per cent, most companies will have difficulty in showing profits for the third quarter due to the small business available in July and a part of August, as well as to the lessened return on sales due to price cuts on products made at the end of June.

While some taxes paid by steel companies are lower this year, the aggregate of taxes paid per ton over the year will not be much changed from the $4.90 a ton tax bill in 1937, due to the rise in social security payments and reduced volume of output. If the industry is making money, of course, it cannot object to paying its share of Federal income, surplus and undistributed profits taxes.

Motors Active.

Motors were, on the whole, more active than most shares although the price trend was lower compared with the ascending scale of a few days ago when buying interest picked up a bit on anticipations of increased activity as soon as production shifts to the 1939 models. General Motors, Chrysler and Yellow Truck all lost large fractions. The oils moved erratically on what buying or selling that was available, an uncertainty having been introduced by price-cutting on crude oil in the key field of east Texas. According to those who should know, the reduced postings by some independents will not be followed by the large companies and are unlikely to affect general price levels.

The narrowness of the market was illustrated by the small number of issues traded, 607, against more than 1,250 listed. There were 286 declines against 147 advances and 174 were unchanged.

Activity in the bond market was at a low ebb today and the thinness of the market made for some rather large price changes. The sum of the price fluctuations was a slight decline on the day, as shown by the recession of 0.04 of a point in the index of 30 bonds compiled by the New York Herald Tribune. The rail bonds were the weak sector of the list, with the ten high grade rails falling off 0.15 of a point and the five second grade rails 0.15 of a point. The ten industrials were 0.10 and the five utilities 0.14 of a point.

United States Government bonds were mixed and fluctuations were small. The present dullness in the Government market contrasts sharply with the period of active trading in the latter half of April and early May, following the gold desterilization and the reduction in reserve requirements. The market may take on new life again when the September 15 financing plans of the Treasury are made known.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., is due back in this country next Monday. He is expected to confer with the executive committee of the Federal Open Market Committee a day or two later on the Treasury's financing program. The Treasury presumably will make known next week its discount bill plans, for the last of the six new money issues so far projected will be sold next Monday. Next week, too, the Secretary may let it be known whether any new money will be raised in September.

The behavior of the Czechoslovak issues seemed to bespeak some relaxation of tension on the continent, for the 8s of 1951 rose 5½ points and the 8s of 1952, 3½ points. Montevideo 6s of 1959, however, tumbled 5⅞ points. Panama 5s of 1963 advanced 4½ points to a new high for the year at 52½. Some of the bloom went off the local traction issues, which were so strong last week. The I. R. T. issues were off 1½ to 3 points and the B. M. T. 4½ of 1966 fell 1¾ points.

Jobless Total Continues Rise For 9th Month

13,957,000 in June Compares With 8,843,000 Last September.

New York, Aug. 22.—The number of persons unemployed in the United States rose in June for the ninth consecutive month, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute today. The unemployed totaled 13,957,000 in June as compared with 13,775,000 in May and with 8,843,000 last September when the low was reached prior to the current recession.

Thus, 4,114,000 persons were added to the ranks of the unemployed during the nine months ended with June. This erased 53.3 per cent of the progress made in reducing unemployment from March, 1933, to September, 1937, when the number of persons unemployed dropped from 16,564,000 to 8,843,000, a decrease of 7,721,000.

While the number of persons unemployed in June this year was only 2,607,000 smaller than at the peak of the last depression in March, 1933, the number of persons employed was 4,401,000 larger than in March, 1933.

The more favorable showing made by the employment figures was due to the fact that the unemployment stuation was adversely affected by the rise in the supply of workers as the result of the growth of population.

Southern Ry. Gets RFC Loan

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission approved yesterday the application of the Southern Railway Co. for a loan of $11,795,000 by the Reconstruction Corporation and the extension of an RFC loan of $12,475,204 maturing September 1.

The commission said that the company was not "in need of financial reorganization in the public interest at this time" and that it may reasonably "be expected to meet its fixed charges without reduction thereof through judicial reorganization."

The Interstate Commerce Commission said the new loan will be used to meet bonded indebtedness maturing September 1. The loan will be for five years and the extension for the same period, making the total indebtedness fall due on September 1, 1943.

Commercial Loans Continue Increase

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday that banks in 101 leading cities increased their business advances $11,000,000 to $3,900,000,000. New York City banks boosted their commercial and industrial credits by $10,000,000 and banks in the Chicago district by $6,000,000, while in other districts these loans declined slightly.

Va. Mayor, Chief Face Arrest on Gaming Charge

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Police Chief George W. Halstead, of Princess Anne County, said today he held warrants for the arrest of Mayor Roy Smith and Police Chief H. L. McClanan, of Virginia Beach, on charges involving gambling at the beach resort.

Chief Halstead said the warrants were sworn to by H. B. Etheridge, assistant manager of the Dunes Club at the beach.

The warrants, sworn out before Justice of the Peace J. C. Hayman, at Virginia Beach, charge that Smith and McClanan, "unlawfully and willfully did aid and abet gambling and did deliver back to its owners gambling paraphernalia that was ordered burned and destroyed by Trial Justice Gresham."

Both defendants will furnish bond and will probably be given a hearing Saturday before Judge Gresham at Princess Anne Courthouse. The Dunes Club, with which Etheridge is connected, was raided by Virginia Beach officers early in the season. Gambling paraphernalia was seized and the operators of the club were fined.

Boy, 17, Rescues 2 Women as Man Sinks to Death

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Gilbert Ricks, of Conway, N. C., was drowned today while swimming with his wife and sister at nearby Chesapeake Beach. The two women escaped the same death only through the heroism of a 17-year-old newsboy.

The trio got into difficulty several hundred yards offshore and cried out for help. The newsboy, Howard Allard, answered the plea for aid and swam out alone. Ricks already had gone under and Mrs. Ricks held onto her sister with a frantic grip. Allard separated the two women and towed them ashore.

Henrico Sheriff Will Ask Bounty On Hawks, Crows

Richmond, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Sheriff Wilson Seay, of Henrico County, said today he would go before the board of supervisors August 31 and ask that a bounty be placed on hawks and crows.

Seay said he had received numerous complaints from farmers that predatory birds had damaged poultry flocks and growing crops. The board will be asked to revive an old ordinance providing for the bounty.

Under the State law, boards of supervisors are authorized to pay the bounty out of the dog tax fund. The bounty for hawks is 50 cents and 15 cents for crows.

Steel Scrap Price Drops Fifty Cents

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—Dow, Jones & Co. says No. 1 heavy melting scrap at Pittsburgh today was quoted at $14.75 to $15.25 a ton, a drop of 50 cents under the previous quotation which was the peak for the recent uptrend in scrap prices.

Reduction in the quotation was the result of lack of inquiries on the part of consuming mills, coupled with increasing scrap supplies, it was said.

Poll Tax Study Group Requests More Time

Richmond, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—A committee named by the Young Democratic Clubs of Virginia to study State poll tax payment as a prerequisite to voting, in its report, filed with President Harold F. Snead, asks that it be given another year to complete its work.

The report will be submitted to the State convention of the clubs here this week-end.

'$30 on Thursdays' In California Hit By Security Chief

By the Associated Press.

The proposed "$30 every Thursday" retirement system, which has become a campaign issue in California, drew condemnation in a letter made public yesterday by Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board.

Responding to a request for comment from Senator McAdoo, New Deal-favored candidate for Democratic renomination, Altmeyer said the proposal would jeopardize continuance of old age assistance payments now being made with Federal aid to 117,000 Californians.

In addition, he declared, it would require additional State taxes of $1,560,000,000 a year, or nearly four times as much as the total State and local tax collections in California in 1936.

A petition has been circulated in California to place the question on the ballot this year, but this effort has been challenged in the State Supreme Court.

Life's Darkest Moment

Bob Burns Says—

The other day I got ahold of a book that tells you how to be a success and the author said that the main rule is to concentrate on a definite goal. Personally I think it's better to go out in the world with an open mind.

When my Cousin Wafford was workin' on the Press-Argus down home, the editor sent him out in the country where they was havin' a big weddin' and told him to hurry back from the weddin' and write the story up. When Wafford came back to the office and had sat around about an hour, without startin' to write anything, the editor says "Why don't you write up that story?" and Wafford says "Well, there was a big gun fight in church, the groom ran off with the bridesmaid and the bride jumped in the river and the weddin' was off—there ain't nothin' to write about!"

Prince Georges G. O. P. Tries to Fill Out Slate

Four Candidates Lacking 2 Hours Before Midnight Deadline.

At a late hour yesterday, Prince Georges County Republican leaders were trying to complete a slate of candidates for the primary September 12 before last night's 12 o'clock deadline for candidates to file.

Two hours before the deadline, the Republicans had not entered candidates for State Senator, county treasurer, clerk to the circuit court and were one nominee short on their slate for House of Delegates. The Republicans announced several days ago they did not intend to enter candidates for the circuit court seats of Judges Joseph Mattingly and William Loker.

The Democratic slate was complete with the exception of Capt. Vinton D. Cockey, of Laurel, who had been indorsed by the State central committee for county surveyor. Capt. Cockey, it was learned, did not intend to file, which will leave the field open to the sole Republican nominee, Thomas E. Latimer, of Hyattsville, seeking re-election.

No Democratic primary for county offices will be necessary since only one candidate filed for each office. James B. Bland, of the Spaulding District, filed for delegate to the State convention, in place of Capt. Richard Mansfield, of Washington's Ninth Police Precinct, when Capt. Mansfield decided he could not run because he is under civil service. Capt. Mansfield resides in Cheverly, Md.

Judges of the Circuit Court Joseph C. Mattingly and William Loker; State senator, Charles C. Marbury; treasurer, Harry McNamee; clerk of the circuit court, Brice Bowie; States attorney, H. Winship Wheatley, jr.; registrar of wills, James Berry; sheriff, William E. Clifton.

House of Delegates—Harold Sothoron, Ralph Powers, John S. White, Lansdale G. Clagett, Robert Forrest, Thomas E. Jones.

State central committee—George N. Palmer, Frank B. Smith, Mary W. Browning, Henry W. Cord, Charles Early, Edward Fuller.

Republican candidates who filed were:

State's attorney, George Burroughs; sheriff, Andrew Gasch, W. Curtis Hopkins, Clifton Stello, Thomas L. Coffren; register of wills, William T. Davis; surveyor, Thomas E. Latimer.

State central committee—Frank Small, John Littlepage, Edgar Czarra, Sherman Holbingsworth, Mrs. Annette P. Fisher, William J. Griffith, Oliver Metzerott, Ernest E. Henson, Howard Proctor, George A. Wall, Joseph L. Galloway, Mrs. Mary W. Jones, Helen B. Cordoza, Mitchell Swann, George N. Bowen, Kennedy Simms and Harry A. Sweeney.

Delegates to the State convention—Mary E. Myers, H. Wilson Spicknall and Adrian P. Fisher.

Justice of the Peace Robert E. Ennis, of Capitol Heights, Md., announced yesterday he would hold an inquest Monday night in the death of Eugene Geary, 42, World War veteran found dead in his home at Hillside, Md., last Saturday from a shotgun wound.

'Perfect' Mate Slays Rival Wife 'Loved'

Estranged Husband Shoots Chicagoan; Gives Up to Police.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—Edward Solomon, 35-year-old accountant, was shot dead on a North Side street today, the police reported, by the estranged husband of a woman friend.

Police Lieut. Michael Ahern said Rudolph Sikora, 31, confronted Solomon with a small caliber pistol and fire five shots into his body.

"Rudolph was a perfect husband. He brought his paycheck home every week and never drank. But I didn't love him. I just liked him. I loved Eddie."

The lieutenant said Mrs. Sikora parted from her husband four weeks ago.

New York, Aug. 22 (AP).—A man booked as James Paskovics, 29, was held on a charge of homicide today in connection with the death of Clark Twelvetrees, 30, former husband of Helen Twelvetrees, motion-picture actress.

Paskovics, who said he was a house painter, confessed striking Twelvetrees when the latter allegedly struck his wife during an altercation on a Manhattan street, Assistant District Attorney Sarafit said.

Twelvetrees was injured August 7 and died of a fractured skull two days later.

Fair Space Goes Fast.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 22 (AP).—Clarence T. Riddick, assistant general manager of the Virginia State Fair, said today practically all of the exhibition space in the Manufacturers and Industrial Building at the Fairgrounds had been reserved for the fair, which opens September 26 to October 1.

Roper Blames Recovery Delay On Distribution

By the Associated Press.

Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper said in a radio address last night that the problem of distribution is the "pivotal" log in the jam retarding economic recovery.

"The distribution system, as well as the system of production, must be purged of uneconomic and wasteful practices and function at less cost," he said. "Since mass production falls short of its objectives without support of mass consumption, prices must be better aligned with demands and purchasing power.

"It seems paradoxical that in this great country, with its abundance of diversified resources, human need could be so serious a problem."

Roper contended that "the pyramiding of needless costs" is the prime defect in the channel of distribution.

"This must be corrected through a proper balancing of costs if the masses are to have a fair chance to improve their standard of living by supplying all their needs, rather than just a few of their needs," he said.

"Without endangering a reasonable return on the real invested capital, improvements in techniques need to be passed on to the consumer in the form of lower costs and an equitable share to labor rather than to reach the stockholder and management in the form of excessive dividends and salaries.

"Such equitable distribution of the benefits of cost reductions would manifestly have a greater effect on the consumer, labor and ownership and hence general prosperity, than would result from the full benefits going to a relatively small group in the form of high salaries and high dividends."

Roper said that "we shall have to confess the lack of economic statesmanship unless we prove ourselves capable of correcting a situation wherein people in one section are burdened with products for which people in another section are in need."

Bair, Tydings Backer, Files for County Office

Westminster, Md., Aug. 22 (AP).—Bruce T. Bair, former Maryland department commander of the American Legion whose report praising Senator Tydings was adopted by the Legion Saturday, has filed for State's attorney of Carroll County.

Bair's annual report to the Legion criticized President Roosevelt for an "invasion in Maryland" in the President's selection of Representative David J. Lewis to run against Senator Tydings, a legionnaire.

Adm. Land Drives First Rivet On Largest U. S.-Built Liner

Huge Vessel to Be Ready for Delivery Early in 1940.

By the Associated Press.

Newport News, Va., Aug. 22.—The largest liner ever projected in the United States began to take shape today as workmen laid her 162,000-pound keel at the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.

The keel is made up of 27 plates five feet wide, 30 feet long and weighing about three tons each.

The new passenger liner, now known only as hull No. 369, will be added to the American transatlantic service operated by the United States Lines between New York, channel ports and Hamburg. She will be running mate to the Manhattan and Washington.

Parts for the liner have been in process of fabrication for nine months. Steel shell plates and bulkheads are ready to be put into place.

The present schedule calls for launching of the vessel July 15, 1939 and delivery to the owners February 20, 1940.

The new liner will be somewhat larger than the Manhattan and Washington, her sister ships. She will have a load displacement of 34,000 tons, accommodations for 1,219 passengers and a crew of 639. She will be 723 feet long, beam 93 feet, 3 inches and a depth to the promenade deck of 75 feet.

REAR ADMIRAL LAND.

Nice Sees G. O. P. Maryland Sweep

Baltimore, Aug. 22 (AP).—A prediction Maryland will vote Republican again this year as it did three years ago in the gubernatorial election was made today by Gov. Nice.

In a speech before 500 colored delegates to the thirty-ninth convention of the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World, Nice, a Republican who seeks re-election, said:

"Three years ago I changed this traditionally Democratic State to a Republican State and I am going to change it again in three months."

The meeting was presided over by William C. Heuston, of Washington, grand commissioner of the order. Convention headquarters said approximately 7,500 delegates were registered today.

Flying Cadet Leaps to Safety As Motor Drops From Plane

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 22.—Aviation Cadet Thomas W. McKnight, United States Navy, took to his parachute and escaped injury today when his Grumann fighter lost its engine while flying 2,500 feet above the heart of the residential section of Norfolk.

Mrs. George N. Tilden, of Malden, Mass., had a narrow escape when the propeller landed only a few yards from her as she was driving on Granby street. The driver of a passing truck picked up the propeller and drove away.
